

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured. MRS. C. C. GOKEY, Northfield, Vt.

If you have any of the symptoms Mrs. Gokey mentions, it is your duty to protect yourself.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is what you need. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your money is returned. Ask your druggist. MILES MEDICAL CO., Toronto, Can.

ERIN'S SACRED PLACE

STORY OF GREEN ISLE AS TOLD IN HER GRAVES.

Beautiful Glasnevin Cemetery in Dublin Where repose the Remains of Her Immortal Patriots—Restless Spirits, Broken Hearts and Martyrs to an Idea Lie Under the Moss-Grown Stones.

Much of the checkered history of Ireland during the 19th century is suggested by the political memorials which plentifully rise amid the calm sylvan beauty of Glasnevin, Dublin. This peaceful abode of serenity, with its rare natural attractions revealing themselves gradually through the fairy-like haze of a kindly Irish spring or summer day and the songbirds in tune in every secluded grove, is a worthy resting place for Ireland's honored dead. The principal standard bearers of her cause, the leaders in her long and sometimes almost despairing fight for national unity, here, on the bosom of their beloved "Kathleen ni Houlihan," find rest and blessed calm for their patient sufferings, their troubled lives, their ruined ambitions and their wasted hopes, and often enough their broken hearts.

The splendid pillar tower, beneath which lie the crypt where sleeps the great "Liberator" Daniel O'Connell, rises high above the surrounding monuments, impressing the mind with a sense of appropriateness and of worthy tribute to Ireland's greatest son. No monument rises to mark the spot where Farnell, through darkness and despair and the ashes of a glorious career, found peace and rest, but the lonely impressiveness of the large expanse of grassy mound which marks the grave of the dead leader leaves an indelible mark on the memory.

Close to the crypt of O'Connell lies one of his most steadfast supporters before the advent of the Young Ireland party, Sir Charles Gavan Duffy. Living alternately between Italy and London his sole thought was Ireland and any project for assisting her cause was sure to find in him a zealous supporter in time and money. His history of the Young Ireland movement is the chief authority on the methods and aims of the men of '48.

Every political movement in Ireland has had its bard—sometimes even a definite school of poetry, as in the '48 movement—to sing its aspirations in thrilling verse of heroic proportions, with love of country and devotion to her cause. In a prominent part of the cemetery rests John Keegan Casey, the son of a peasant, who, working in Dublin as a clerk, was attracted to the Fenian movement, became one of its active members, and sang its political desires and hopes of freedom in defiant and stirring ballads of simple language, which reached and roused the hearts of the people where more ornate and polished verse would have failed. The movement failed chiefly through misadventure and wavering hesitation of James Stephens, its chief organizer, but it owed a great deal of its strength to the author of "The Rising of the Moon," and many soul-stirring ballads and songs, to quote the inscription on the beautiful Celtic cross erected over his grave by the Young Ireland Society. He was a political prisoner in 1867 and died in 1870 before he had reached the age of 24.

"His last words were a prayer of intercession for his country's liberty and his soul's salvation."
Ireland owes much to her songsters and it is fitting that the greatest of her poets, the unhappy James Clarence Mangan, should find his last resting place in the midst of her honored dead. Mangan inevitably suggests a close parallel with Edgar Allan Poe in the melancholy gloom which overshadowed their lives, in the regrettable tendency to seek oblivion by drowning their senses and their genius in strong drink, in the fatal similarity of their end, but, above all, in the haunting rhythm and nameless charm which distinguish the immortal verse of both. Mangan died of cholera in a public hospital in Dublin at the age of 46, and would have filled a pauper's grave had not one of the noted Plunkett family placed his burial place at the disposal of the authorities.

And what thrilling memories are evoked as we stand by the grave of heroic Anne Devlin—"The faithful servant of Robert Emmet," so the simple epitaph reads. Housekeeper for Emmet during the dangerous time when his insurrectionary plot was hatching, she was arrested after the fiasco of July 23, 1803, tortured and frightfully maltreated by the brutal rearmy who prodded her with their bayonets in the arms and shoulders until she was covered with blood, and afterwards half hanged her on the shafts of a cart converted into a gallows. This young woman of barely 26 neither then nor afterwards during the long years of cruel imprisonment allowed an incriminating word of Emmet and his associates to escape her lips. In her later life this noble example of heroic womanhood was a common washerwoman, living in a miserable hovel, unnoticed and unknown, and as her epitaph reads she "lived in obscurity and poverty and so died" in 1851.

The fine cross of Celtic design over the untenanted grave of the "Manchester martyr," Allen Larkin and O'Brien, with its simple inscription giving the names and stating that they were "hanged at Manchester and buried there in the jail November 23, 1867," gives convincing proof that the people were ready if properly led to fight desperately for their independence. Whatever may have been the merits of the crown case at their trial, it appears certain that several petitions of English origin, and eventually signed, were addressed to the Government praying for a reprieve and that Mrs. Annie Besant, the famous theosophist, publicly protested in the court against the unfairness of the trial. Her joint petition with the dread sentence of death had been pronounced, "God save Ireland," was the inspiration of one of T. D. Sullivan's most stirring ballads.

RICH AMERICANS ARE NO CREDIT TO SOCIETY.

The Widow of W. B. Leeds, the "Tin Plate King," Starts For Old Country—Healthy Amusements and Less Snobbish There.

New York, Dec. 18.—New York society learned, to-day, that Mrs. William B. Leeds, widow of the multi-millionaire "tin plate king," is taking her son, William, Jr., aged eight, to England, so that he may be raised with the viewpoint of an Englishman which she thinks is more wholesome than that of an American. Mrs. Leeds sails on the Lusitania, to-day.

"I feel that the fact that my son will inherit a great fortune will turn his head if he is allowed to grow up in an American atmosphere," Mrs. Leeds is quoted as saying.

"Conversation here seems to be just one scandal after another. Aboard they talk of music, art, literature—things worth while. Oh, if my countrymen and countrywomen would only take the same interest in the affairs of the state that they take in these unimportant things."

Mrs. Leeds reached the conclusion to make England her home after her son, desiring to send an elderly lady some flowers, which would only be a credit to society. Their wealth makes them dissipated. In England it is different. They have a lot of healthy amusements, and grow up strong and pleasant. Then, too, at an English school no one will do to William. They will respect him for what he is, not what his father made for him.

"So if William is brought up in England, he will learn to love outdoor sports. He will get the point of view of a young Englishman, a better view, I think, than ours, and he will learn that over-drinking is not tolerated in good society, as I fear it is here, sometimes."
