He Writes to the Whig About His Tour Norway and Elsewhere.

"About March 1st. 1909, I was taken deathly sick with Liver Congestion and Stomach Trouble. I failed from 125 pounds to 80 pounds and was confined to bed for eight weeks. The doctors said they could do nothing for me, and as a last resort, one of the doctors told me to try "Fruit-a-tives"—if they would not cure me, nothing would.

My husband bought some "Fruit-a-tives" and inside of ten days, I was able. Some say it was the action of gigantic from Hardanger to the North Cape, and so leave my bed. My stomach got

Of course none but the smaller boats can wind their tortuous way through these picturesque passages. For days at a time our steam yacht "Kong Harald" scarcely poked her nose out at sea at all. Only while sailing around the segments separating the entrances to the fjords did we occasionally get a reminder of the restless ocean. But even here the island guard insured absolutely smooth waters at all times. I mention this for the consolation of those who for one can cruise from Stavanger to the North Cape in fair weather or foul and never miss a meal. And more is the joy for true to the epicurean traditions of Norway, dining on the ship as elsewhere here is an event of tremendous importance and if you have never eaten fresh salmon taken in these fjords and prepared and served as only the Norwegians know how to prepare and serve it you waive all right to make any claims as to what the taste of fish is really like. Ye gods, the picture of that really like. Ye gods, the picture of that ravishing salmon as it was borne by the fair-haired, rosy cheeked waitress to the ship's table lingers like a benediction in my memory. Even now I can smell the savory odor and see the faint pink color as my fork sank almost by its own weight, into the tender morsel. Fish? weight into the tender morsel. Fish? Why the very name is a travesty on the firmy tribe if applied to any other kind save Norwegian salmon. I know not the composition of the fabled ambrosia, mor do I care to know, so long as Norsmooth waters and prepared by a Nor-wegian cook. Ambrosia may be fit for the gods but it would certainly go a begging among mortals if fresh Nor-

This process has been going on for centuries and yet the reindeer has never willingly consented to this domestic life.

age between seventy and eighty appears almost as fruitful, being twenty-three per cent, of great acts.

If we are to believe Dr. William A. V. Dorland, the compiler of these statistics, sixty-four per cent. of the most re-markable things done by the hundred of the most remarkable men of all history were the product of their lives after they were fifty years old. "The Age of Mental Virility" is a book of interest. This is cheerful reading. We are all looking forward to at least eighty years. That our best results should be after we are fifty is good news. But there are two or three its in the way. This compiler worked with a hundred of the best of our species. These were men, superior human ani-mals, their being-physical, mental, spiritual. The ordinary human animal may doubt his part in such vitality. None of the great hundred were dry goods clerks, railroad conductors, housewives or any other of the type of plain, everyday toilers, such as we are. In other words, the greatest men are in a class by themselves.

The world is full of men who are utclassed and don't know it. Lawyers suffer when arbitration takes the place of litigation.
