King Olaf gave his life fighting for his new religion, and the church erected over his grave became in later years a favorite shrine to which the devout made frequent pilgrimages from not only all of Norway, but from most of Eastern Europe as well. But with the reformation the church lost its prestige, and afterward suffered greatly from fire. In the later centuries, however, it recovered its importance, and now rehabilitated and restored, it stands as the greatest cathedral in this latitude in the whole world. In the church yard that surrounds it we read on the tombstones many a name that figured prominently in Norway's martial glory, and the graves now nestling among beautiful rose beds and carnations spoke impressively of the ultimate destiny of all mankind.
