DUNLOP Traction Tread

Another Opinion:
"I have much pleasure in stating that I have used your Anti-Skid tires since April last, and am still driving the same set, which have gone over five thousand miles. They have caused no trouble whatever, and look as if they were good for another 2,500 miles, at least. I also find that they grip the pavements in greasy weather much better than most of the alleged Anti-Skid tires at present on the market; as a matter of fact, I have never had any chains on since I started using them."

SOCIALISM AND PENSIONS.

The address of Prof. Skelton, before the Canadian Club, on "The Socialist Drift," was very illuminating. Socialism is a big study, and it cannot be understood without present study. The average socialist is a passionate student. He may be calm enough at the outset, but eventually, and before long, he imparts the spirit of his class and then his viewpoint is "entirely changed."

In the course of his address—which described concisely the progress of the socialist movement, in Europe and America—Prof. Skelton referred to the old age pension scheme as something which was subject to varying opinions. Prof. Skelton is evidently in harmony with some of the views of Sir Richard Cartwright, and he should be able to express himself freely on the question without inviting the ridicule which the Montreal Star poured upon the venerable senator.

The Cartwright idea is that men should be encouraged to succeed in service and thrift, and when they do the annuities system is the most satisfying. Yet there are many who cannot, through stress of circumstances, provide for the contingencies of old age, and they are not to be ignored or forgotten.

The danger of old age pensions is in opening the way for indolence and improvidence, and one can look at this side of the question without being submitted to attack. The defenders of the annuities' system should not be abused because they do not, and cannot, see eye to eye with the champions of old age pensions.

MINISTER CALLED TO BOOK.

During the last federal elections, Mr. Crothers, who is now the minister of labour, said at two or three meetings in West Elgin, which he represents: "I am in favour of indemnifying every man who lost a dollar by the operations of the management of the Farmers' Bank. Some people have said that the depositors only should have their losses made good, but I hold that others are in the same position as the depositors. . . . We intend to see that every man who lost will be recompensed."

According to Hansard, the premier was interrogated on the subject a few days ago. It is the privilege of some men to say wild things, and it is the duty of the first minister to account for them. Thus Mr. Borden was, after due notice, asked if there had been any promise given by Mr. Crothers in the terms of his speech at Kerwood, Elgin county, and Mr. Borden, presumably after questioning Mr. Crothers, said:

"No such promise was made by the minister of labour. The government has no information as to promises made by other government supporters."

Here is a direct repudiation of a speech which was reported in several of the papers, including that staunch defender of conservatism, the London Free Press. It is not uncommon in these days. Mr. Pelletier, the postmaster-general, and Mr. Reid, the minister of customs, went up into South Rensselaire, and supposing they were free to see what they liked made statements which they later disowned when they were asked for explanations in the commonsense.

The conservative press, and especially the London Free Press, may stand the denials of the minister of labour, but there are some people who will put him on the defence a little later. These are the depositors and stockholders of the Farmers' Bank who are alleged to have Mr. Crothers' assurance that the conservative party, if returned to power, would see that they were reimbursed from the public exchequer for all their losses. The assumption is that the party did not expect to succeed, and that Mr. Crothers did a little blushing. The success of his party to power puts him in an embarrassing position. Chickens, they say, will come home to roost.

LAURIE AND LANCASTER.

The Brockville Times has spent a column in combating an idea which does not concern the Whig very much, though the Whig has seriously disturbed our contemporary's peace of mind. This paper had occasion to refer to the most remarkable debate which Mr. Lancaster precipitated and with regard to the Ne Temere decree. Mr. Lancaster led off boldly. He was greatly encouraged by some of his political friends.

Mr. Wallace, of Centre, York, was "in perfect accord" with Mr. Lancaster's bill, and was in favour of it. Mr. Northrup, (East Hastings), regarded the Lancaster bill as "one of the most important," and meant to use his own judgment in supporting it. Mr. Burnham, of West Peterboro, wanted the Lancaster bill passed and sent to the highest court, so that its value might be determined. Mr. Clark, of Bruce, was in line with Lancaster, and so was Col. Hughes, who wanted it understood that he was "marching shoulder to shoulder" with the man from Lincoln.

Mr. Borden moved an amendment to the bill, practically shelving it for the time being. His idea was that the competency of parliament to pass the Lancaster bill respecting marriages

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The C.M.A. cannot any more do the open and audacious act of handing the finance department its brief on tariff changes. But it can accomplish its purpose quite as well through the tariff commission.

Sir James Whitney referred to Mr. Rowell's first criticism of the government as "remarkable." And it is only a sample of the remarkable addresses which the young and progressive leader will make during the session.

If the forestry department of our government was declared to be non-political—and the only one in the government—there would be some encouragement to young men to enter the service and plan for a life-occupation.

An hundred and eighty-three men and women attended the weekly divorce matinee in New York city, and with wonderful facility Judge Newberger severed the bonds which, God having made, were man was warned not to put asunder. There is nothing very sacred or binding about the marriage rite in New York city.

NO POLITICS IN FORESTRY.

Clifford Pinchot is the highest authority in the United States on forestry, and in Ottawa, in an address, he emphasized four fundamentals, which, he said, were necessary if forestry were to be made a success: "No politics, enough money, trained men and federal control."

Academically he stated a great truth, but only academically. Mr. Pinchot was released from office in his own country because he came into conflict with the politicians, the men who were acquiring or appropriating great national wealth, the monopolists whom the national government did not, or could not, control. The repetition of an eternal truth amounts to very little when it fails to find a recognition where it should, and the champion of it suffers.

It was some time after Mr. Pinchot had been removed from office, after he had passed through a fiery enquiry on the result of which an investigating committee split, and after the forestry commissioner had endured more than his share of political humiliation, that some things happened in the American forestry department. He was vindicated.

No politics in the public service! Can politics be kept out of it? The Montreal Harbor Commissioners are representatives of that class of non-political experts who should be lauded and magnified. They took office with the determination that they would not know any man politically, that their time, their energies, their talents would be consecrated to the public service. And twenty-three nationalist members of Quebec will never be happy until they have taken the political lives of these worthies.

It may be that in Ottawa some day the principle for which Mr. Pinchot contends will prevail, that some branches of the public service will be free from partisan taint, and that the people's cause will be exalted on its merits. Until that day all men like Pinchot can do is preach the doctrine that no man can dispute.

Our Princess' Fad.

Princess Patricia has that rare and rather dangerous talent for caricature which may be described as a mixture of the pencil, and lately she has been amusing her family circle with some rather daring "take-offs" of themselves. One represents the Duke of Connaught (her father) in a violent rage wearing the uniform of a Field Marshal and calling out, "Where's my horse?" This sketch is framed and hung up in the billiard room at Balmoral. The Princess colors her sketches and gives a dainty and dashing finish, which makes them excellent pictures, apart from their value as portraits. Just occasionally, of course, she has managed to get into trouble with them—what caricaturist does not? All the same she must get quite enough fun out of them to pay for it.

Want an Accounting.

Several California labor unions have joined in issuing an appeal for help in forcing an accounting of the McNamara Defense Fund, by labor leaders who raised it. The appeal says in part:

"This money (nearly a million dollars collected in California, alone) was collected for a specific purpose. It was not to have been spent on painted women; it was not to have been given away like water to labor leaders to do what they might with and without accounting. It was certainly not given to buy micro-glycerine with which to blow up human beings. "We want an accounting."

MAY IRWIN TALKS SHE SAYS WATERTOWN WOMEN WEAR RUBBER BOOTS.

Popular Actress Declares That North Country Carries Away All Honors for Snow.

Oswego, N.Y., Feb. 10.—May Irwin thinks Watertown takes the palm for snow.

"My, that's an awful country for snow," said Miss Irwin to a reporter as she alighted from her car, Wednesday, "I see you have forty of fifty inches on the ground here, but this is Palm Beach, Florida, compared with that north country. A lady whom I know well, and who lives in Watertown, dropped into the hotel to call upon me, yesterday, and what do you think she wore on her feet?—rubber boots. I thought I'd die when she pulled up her skirts and displayed them. But they looked comfortable in that country, and were it not for the fact that my emboipoint precludes the possibility of getting a comfortable fit, I might be induced to get a pair the next time I go up that way in winter."

"That's a great bunch of jokers in Watertown," continued Miss Irwin. "They had a poultry show over there a few weeks ago and I was induced to send up some of my best laying hens, the ones that earn fifty cents each every twelve days. Now I know that there is nothing better in the state than some of the stock I sent and the judges thought so, too. For I got two prizes—a pair of boxing gloves and a razor. There was a time when I occasionally used a razor, but my corns vanished years ago, and I haven't a callous on either foot."

"How is the canal here? Will it be open this coming season? You know this was a favorite route of mine going and coming from my summer home, Irwin Isle Inn, near Clayton, and we expect to enjoy the route again if possible the coming summer. I see that Lachlan Macleay has arranged for the Richelieu boats to stop here this season. That will help us out. We can take a down boat from here and be at home in a few hours. I wish Mr. Macleay would arrange to have the boats stop at our dock."

"I took a run down to Clayton last night and my, what mountains of snow. Talk about Dr. Cook and my old friend, Commodore Peary, they haven't anything on our party after

A Tyrant Squire.

More like a dominating Eastern magnate than an English squire, Sir Tatton Sykes, of Siedmore House, England conspicuous among the aristocrats of the day for his pronounced individuality. Here is an illustration of his depotic ways. When he built some new cottages near his seat recently, he insisted that the front doors must not open, because, he said such doors facilitated gossiping among women. But even his sub-servant tenants would not reside in them under those conditions. Sir Tatton is also notorious for the adoption of a unique way of maintaining an even temperature. Before starting on a ride he dons several overcoats, which he discards one by one as he gets warm, leaving the superfluous garments on the hedge to be brought home by a lucky.
