And What Agrees With You, But Do Not Eat Too Much.

Digestion Will Be Good if You Regulate the System With

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Overeating is the great cause of liver troubles, biliousness and constipation. The digestive system becomes clogged with poisonous waste matter, the liver fails and then follow kidney disorders of the most painful and fatal form, such as rheumatism, Bright's disease and dropsy.

The beginning is almost invariably with the liver and should be overcome by the prompt use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills before serious disease is developed.

An occasional dose of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills when the liver gets sluggish and the bowels constipated will keep the whole digestive system in healthy working order.

Hundreds of thousands of people have found this out by their own experience and would not think of being without this medicine in the house. Others have been restored to health by this treatment after their cases had reached more serious and complicated stages.

There does not seem to be any medicine obtainable which is so successful in awakening the action of both liver and kidneys as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. Merit alone can account for their enormous sales.

AROUND THE WORLD Across the Indian Empire

By Our Special Correspondent, EDGAR ALLEN FORBES

THE big Hamburg-American cruising ship Cleopatra, with 500 American and German passengers on their way around the globe, was plowing steadily across the Indian ocean. Long before the beautiful harbor of Bombay was reached the loud and insistent voice of the man-who-knows-it-all was repeatedly heard on every deck:

"You may expect the trip across India to be insufferably hot and dusty. The trains are not built for the comfort of tourists; the food will be abominable; the water is likely to be infected. You will be very rash if you attempt the overland trip."

Then spoke the traveler with the Wisconsin disposition: "Are you not the man who told us how we should swallow and stew and fry while passing through the Red Sea? And yet when have we ever had a more delightful time?"

"Well, exceptions will happen. Make the trip if you doubt my word, but I shall be glad that I am not you!"

And 120 of the passengers took their lives in their hands and went overland from Bombay to Calcutta. Two weeks

For an afternoon we climbed a series of hills and then for two nights and a day sped across a beautiful plain to Agra, the city of Akbar, the great Mogul gunning into a station that is fifteen cars long. Here was a great city four centuries ago, and through its narrow, winding streets flows a stream of life that has changed but little since the century when it was the Mogul capital. With all of its wonderful charm to western eyes Agra is but the echo of a past forever dead. Its crowning glory is a tomb—the matchless Taj Mahal, built by Shah Jehan as a tribute to the memory of Mumtaz Mahal. Surely she must have been a jewel among women to leave such an emptiness in the life of an oriental like this Mogul. Overshadowed by the greatness of the Taj, but scarcely less wonderful, are the marble palace, the dazzling pearl mosque and other reminders of an ancient empire whose barbaric court was scarcely rivaled anywhere in the world.

Another night ride and we awoke in beautiful Delhi, the future capital of India, as it was its past. Here are Another night in the train and we awoke in a city of grim memorials—Cawnpore on the Ganges. How vividly was recalled that terrible massacre of English women and children by the treacherous Nana Sahib when a Hindu led us to a memorial that marks the place where the butchery took place! "Here," said the guide, "Havelock coming like a mad dog and finding only dresses and shoes!" Then he led us to the Ganges, where the men had been treacherously shot down, and there to the well where the women and children were thrown, now marked by Marichetti's beautiful angel of white marble.

In the afternoon we were in a city forever memorable because of its heroic defense—Lucknow, forty-two miles away. It is a beautiful place, with more than 200,000 people, magnificent hotels and public buildings and beautiful bungalows and with palaces and mosques that are worthy of a long pilgrimage. But the most interesting place of all is the ruin of the residence, where the British garrison fought for their women and children ster about 119 of these agreed that they had had the time of their lives, and they told the details with much glee in the hearing of the man who knew it all.

It was a special train that took us across this great empire, and the train as a revelation. It was a train of sleeping cars arranged in compartments for two, four and six people. Each large compartment had toilet and wash room attached, with comfortable beds by day and cosy beds by night, instead of sweltering through sleepless nights we gladly used our blankets from the ship. Two dining cars went with us as far as Delhi, and large depot restaurants awaited us elsewhere. The food and service were almost equal to those of the ship, and the passengers enjoyed the joke on the pitying friends left behind.

It was a great surprise to find such a railroad in faraway India. One of the travelers was an employe of an American railroad service, and he admitted that he would be proud to have it incorporated in that system. Double tracked, standard gauge, well ballasted, with beautiful masonry at bridges and culverts and with stations of more tasteful and commodious than any railroad in America, the lines that cross the great empire of India are a great credit to the mother country.

great mosques and forts and palaces, for this was once the greatest of the Mogul cities, thirty miles in circumference. Here, with the white race relatively absent from the streets, live 210,000 Hindus and Mohammedans, scarcely changed in costume or life by western invasions. The shopkeepers squat in their tiny bazaars or spread in the street their wares of beaten brass, carved ivory, embroidered silks, perfumed sandalwood and all the intoxicating and tempting finery of the east. Soldiers and traders from every province in the empire jostle one another in the streets—tall, bearded Sikhs, lithe Gurkhas, with Japanese features; brilliantly garbed retainers of maharajas, with now and then a little group of Gordon highlanders or men of the Black Watch.

Here it was, in this city with a recorded history running back to 1193, that the great Indian mutiny began in 1857, but the banners of England still flies majestically from the Mogul fort. The durbar camp, acres and acres and acres of gayly decorated tents, was a blaze of color. Every train was bringing the prince of India and their gorgeous suits, and almost every form of conveyance known in the east lent itself to the ever changing glory of the great show. It alone was worth the journey of 870 miles from Bombay.

until Havelock and Colin Campbell came. Over it flies the old British flag in the empire that is never hauled down, day or night. Next came the holy city of Benares, with forty-seven bathing ghats, 500 mosques and 1,000 pagodas. Here, on the banks of the Ganges, we saw at a glance every step in the procedure of burning the dead, from the bathing of a newly arrived body in the Ganges to the sweeping of the ashes into the sacred river. Long haired fakirs were everywhere, with now and then a self torturing devotee. Its thronging crowds made a wonderful panorama that no one who has seen it can ever forget.

Another ride of 411 miles brought us to Calcutta, so modern that it was hard to recognize as Indian. And here we landed without a case of illness or accident, with not one sleepless night and with no yearning for better food.

At the hotel we found the man-who-knows-it-all. He had made the voyage to Calcutta by boat. "Had a big time?" we asked him. "Yes," he said dubiously, "but it was pretty hot. We had two cases of heat prostration in Ceylon, and the rest of us are a little fagged."

"If you want a little rest and recreation," he advised sympathetically, "let us try the overland trip across India."

DO YOUR HANDS CHAP?

Zam-Buk Will Give You Ease in One Night.

For badly chapped hands, cold cracks, frost bites, etc., Zam-Buk is the best-known ointment. Wash the hands or part affected in water as hot as can be borne. Dry with a soft towel, and then smear the Zam-Buk well over the part. If it is the hands wear a pair of old gloves over night. By morning the pain will be gone. Then use Zam-Buk a few more times until the cracks will be healed. Mrs. A. F. Phillips, of Ayers Cliff, Que., says: "I suffered terribly from chapped hands. At times my hands were so sore that I could almost have cried with the pain. I tried Zam-Buk and in a very short time my hands were cured."

Must Pay Their Bills.

The New York civic employes are held responsible to pay their bills. Last week several firemen were brought before the deputy commissioner and fined five days' pay each, ordered to pay butchers' and grocers' bills of from $30 to $47.32, with the alternative of dismissal from the service. The rule was laid down that civic employes must not beat their creditors. From which it will be seen that Tammany has some ideas as to personal integrity that Canadians could afford to copy.

Bubbles always seem real until they burst.

We shall have to revise our loudly-asserted claim that Ontario is an agricultural province par excellence. Either our minister of agriculture, or our farmers, or both, are not up to the mark. With enough land under cultivation to feed twenty millions of people, we don't grow enough to feed two millions. Why should a province like Ontario have to import butter from Australia; potatoes from Ireland, and eggs from the southern United States? Of course, exceptional seasonal conditions may account for scarcity of the potato crop, but we certainly still have cows that are alive, and our hens, should do better than they are and have been doing. Ontario importing butter, eggs and potatoes is "bringing coals to Newcastle" with a vengeance.

If we remember rightly, the white man's burden wasn't a load of money. When some people do tell the truth they ought to label it.

THE WEALTH OF SCOTLAND.

An Interesting Contrast is Made With Ireland.

"The Economic position of Scotland and her financial relations with England and Ireland" was the title of a paper read by Edgar Crammond at a meeting of the Royal Society of Arts, Adelphi, London, on the 19th ult. Lord George Hamilton, president was in the chair.

Mr. Crammond said although the question of the finance of Scotland had not yet engaged public attention, it was really of as great importance to the British taxpayer as the question of the financial relations of Ireland with Great Britain. Ireland is a drain upon the Exchequer of the United Kingdom to the extent of about £1,300,000 per annum, and makes no contribution whatever to the charges for the Army and Navy, and whereas Scotland, after meeting her local expenses, contributes a surplus of about £9,000,000 per annum to imperial expenditure.

During the past ninety years the population of Scotland has grown from 2,691,521 to 4,759,521, an increase of 2,068,000, or practically 125 per cent. It was somewhat remarkable that throughout the whole period Scotland has maintained her relative proportion to the total population of the United Kingdom round about the same figure, namely ten per cent. The ever-increasing flow of emigration from Scotland in recent years has been ascribed to a variety of causes, but the principal influence had no doubt been the declining importance of agriculture.

Scotland was one of the principal manufacturing countries in the world. According to the recent Census of Production the gross output of the manufacturing industries of Scotland was £28,000,000 sterling or 11.8 per cent. of the total for the United Kingdom, and more than three times the value of the output of Ireland. The net output of Scottish industries was £29,000,000 or 12.2 per cent. of the aggregate for the United Kingdom and nearly four times the value of the net output of Ireland.

Mr. Crammond entered into an examination of official figures on this aspect of his subject and continued:—The national wealth of Scotland may be estimated at £1,451,913,000, or £305 per head. This compares with an aggregate of £13,517,067,000, or £383 per head, in the case of England and Wales, and £700,000,000 or £160 per head in the case of Ireland; so that Scotland may be said to contain approximately 9.1 per cent. of the national wealth of the United Kingdom.

Old age pensions of Scotland absorbed £1,064,000, but Ireland with 377,570 less population required £2,408,000 for this purpose. The agricultural grant for Scotland was only £98,000, while that of Ireland, including the Department of Agriculture and the development grant, was £606,000, inclusive of £728,000 paid under local taxation account. In addition to this the Irish Land Commission costs the imperial exchequer £414,500, for which charge there was no equivalent in the case of Scotland. The grants to the Scottish Universities amounted to only £64,000, but the Irish universities and colleges received £166,000. Again the imperial treasury had to bear the cost of the Royal Irish constabulary, which amounted to £1,371,000, while Scotland had to bear her own police charges. Scotland is, therefore, fairly entitled to claim that the over-representation of Ireland is an injustice to the taxpayers of Scotland as well as England.

Publicity is No Evil.

A tariff commission is what Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden promises to the West. A Canadian Premier should strive to keep his promise. A tariff commission on the lines proposed by Hon. W. T. White is slightly expensive and entirely harmless. A tariff commission might easily be worth its keep if it would publicly investigate the method of capitalizing industries which seek protection either in the form of bounties on tariffs. The tariff commission might also publicly enquire as to the truth of these charges to the effect that agricultural implements of Canadian origin are sold cheaper to foreign farmers than to Canadian farmers. Hon. W. T. White erred in his perhaps unintentional suggestion that secrecy was to be the law of the tariff commission's life.

The country does not want a tariff commission that lives and moves and has its being in an atmosphere of fear and hatred of publicity. Hon. W. T. White seems to imagine that a tariff commission must do good by stealth. The country cherishes the conviction that an industry which accepts help in the form of public tariffs should submit to restraints in the form of public enquiries.

COMING TO THE GRAND.

A Matinee and Night Performance on Saturday.

"Daniel Boone on the Trail" comes to the Grand on Saturday, Feb. 24th, matinee and night. The play is a western drama and as the name implies treats of incidents in the life of this famous pioneer. Most of the happenings of the hair-raising type such as the throwing of Boone's daughter into a den of bears; the burning of Boone's cabin by the Indians; fight for life with a pack of wolves and the rescue of Boone by his famous trailing dogs. Heroism in face of danger is always appealing. Col. Harry K. Hamilton as Daniel Boone makes the character all that can be desired; while the band of Sioux Indians, headed by Chief Young Buffalo, a grandson of Sitting Bull, the famous Indian warrior, makes the walk-in ring with their cries, and they enter into the spirit of the play with a glee that makes their work particularly realistic. The last act shows the surrender of the Indians, and Geo. Remington's message to Boone and returning peace by the removal of the Indians further west. It is a stirring story, capably told.

ARE MICROBES IN YOUR SCALP?

It Has Been Proved That Microbes Cause Baldness.

Professor Unna of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabouraud, the leading French dermatologist, discovered that a microbe caused baldness. Their theory has time and again been verified through research experiments carried on under the observation of eminent scientists. This microbe lodges in the sebium, which is the natural hair oil, and when permitted to flourish it destroys the hair follicles and in time the pores entirely close, and the scalp gradually takes on a shiny appearance. When this happens there is no hope of the growth of hair being revived.

We have a remedy which will, we honestly believe, remove dandruff, exterminate the microbe, promote good circulation in the scalp and around the hair roots, tighten and revitalize the hair roots, and overcome baldness, so long as there is any life left in the hair roots.

We back up this statement with our own personal guarantee that this remedy called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will be supplied free of all cost to the user if it fails to do as we state.

It will frequently help to restore gray and faded hair to its original color, providing less of color has been caused by disease; yet it is in no sense a dye. Rexall "93" Hair Tonic accomplishes these results by aiding in making every hair root, follicle, and pigment, gland strong and active and by stimulating a natural flow of coloring pigment throughout the hair cells.

We exact no obligations or promises—we simply ask you to give Rexall "93" Hair Tonic a thorough trial and if not satisfied tell us and we will refund the money you paid us for it. Two sizes, prices 50c. and $1. Remember, you can obtain it in Kingston only at our store—The Rexall Store. G. W. Mahood.
