KEEPING CLOSE TAB

ON THE PRISONERS AT THE PENITENTIARY.

Recent Occurrence Has Guards Kept up to Highest Point—One Escape Makes Other Convicts Much Braver—Will Help Come From the Outside.

Since the escape of the desperadoes, from the penitentiary, the guards are all on the qui vive, as it were. They are watching the men closely, even the short term men, who are engaged in work every day, outside the big prison walls. It is a well-known fact that an occurrence such as that which took place on Monday, when five prisoners were able to make their way out of the front gate, is the means of making all the other prisoners much braver than they were before, and some, if given a chance to make a bolt for freedom, would take that one chance. The work of keeping guard on prisoners is indeed a big proposition. A man who is outside of the big prison and who is not engaged in the work, can offer many suggestions, as to how the prisoners ought to be guarded, but perhaps, if given a chance on the inside, he would not be able to carry out all his plans successfully. The man with the striped clothing, has all of his time to scheme for an escape, and especially if he is of a desperate character, he will take advantage of every chance. In the escape of Monday, it was a case of a desperate man taking a chance. The prisoner McNeil had not been regarded as a desperate prisoner, and had not been classed with the four from Stoney Mountain. Guards Watchful. The people living in Portsmouth are still talking about the daring escape of the prisoners. A Whig reporter was out in the village on Friday, and everywhere he went the conversation was based on the "daring escape." It is safe to say that a little talk, declared by Justice of the Peace George Hunter, to be "the best on earth," has not been so stirred in many years. As a result of the two recent escapes all the guards and keepers are keyed up to the highest point. They now know what kind of men they are up against. "The men are back again, but we will be sure to hear from them again." This remark is credited to one of the guards, but it is to be hoped that the desperadoes will never be able to get the upper hand of the staff again. Now that the desperate gang has failed in this one attempt will they be given some assistance from the outside to enable them to make a feat that many are asking. Some are inclined to believe that some of their friends will be paying a visit to this vicinity and endeavor to pull off some game to get them out. However, as the men are not allowed out of the isolation wards it will be a very hard task for them to pull off any such game. If the men were put at work out in the fields then there certainly would be trouble, but as the men are of such a desperate character no such chance as this would be taken. It is rumored that the third Mecum trial is around Kingston, though no one can spot him. Tried to Ring Alarm Bell. The whole of the story of the escape of the five desperadoes has not even yet been told. It comes to hand piece by piece. The investigation will yield more particulars. For instance, it will be noted that an convict, who did chores in the isolation building, from which the escape was made, tried to ring the alarm bell when he saw what was happening. He was detected by McNeil and the Mecum and was most brutally attacked. One of the vicious convicts kicked him in the stomach while another beat him with an iron bar into insensibility. It is said that this convict who tried to alarm the prison of the planned escape may be granted his freedom. He certainly deserves it. Carrying of Revolvers. It is two years or more since the guards in the inside and isolation departments carried revolvers. It was thought better to have them unarmed. The likelihood is that Inspector Stewart will order all guards to be armed. A firearm, particularly in the form of a revolver, makes a convict think twice before he will attack one who carries one of these handy little shoters. Convict McNeil did not use a knife to "yank" the leg off his iron bed. A knife would be no use in cutting a heavy rivet. McNeil simply wrenched the leg off. He is a powerful fellow, and besides there was a flaw in the rivet. BIG INCREASE IN EXPORTS From Kingston During the Month of April.
