

The Airtight Package Keeps Tea Good.

RED ROSE TEA "is good tea"

PRaises Canadian Press.

Still Reads Our Papers, Says Earl Grey.

London, May 4.—Earl Grey, who presided at a meeting of the newspaper press fund yesterday, made some remarks apropos of the Canadian press. He wouldn't flatter the British journalists, he said, by saying that the Canadian press was in some respects inferior to their own, as owing to journalistic exhibitions in Canada, comparison couldn't be admitted. The spirit of party rivalry he considered naturally unfavorable to the creation of a press which could subordinate dividends to exclusive regard for the highest interests.

General. "I have been so favorably impressed by the abolition of certain papers for which they were responsible fearless champions of principles which make a nation honorable, that I retained the practice of reading their articles to my great profit and advantage even after my return to London."

A REKINDLED LOVE

HUSBAND FORGETS JEALOUSY WHICH NEARLY COST LIFE.

Reconciliation is Complete—Still on Crutches, He Hobbles Into Court and Secures Dismissal of Case Against the Woman.

Chicago, May 3.—Six flashes from a revolver held in his wife's hand as he shot at him, wounding him twice, served only to rekindle the dying love of C. A. Richey for her. So the jealous rage of the woman which nearly caused a tragedy led to a romance which had a happy culmination in Municipal Judge Dicker's court.

There Mrs. Richey was to face trial on the charge of having tried to kill her husband because she found in his pockets endearing letters from other women. The state was present with evidence to that effect. There were witnesses to tell of how she had fired six shots at her husband on April 29th in her home. They were to testify how he had received two wounds, one in a shoulder and another in a foot, and how he was found lying in pain as his wife stood over him, her emptied revolver still in her hand.

In the court room hobbled a man on crutches, bandaged and wan. Behind him, her arm around his shoulder, aiding him at every step, was a woman whose eyes were filled with love.

There was a thrill of surprise for the prosecuting attorney and then the case was called.

"Where is the defendant?" asked the clerk.

The woman beside the man on crutches arose.

"And the prosecuting witness?"

The woman turned, held out her hands, and gently lifted the cripple to his feet.

"There is no prosecuting witness," he said. "There was."

"I am C. A. Richey," he continued wrothly. "I don't want to prosecute my wife. I did wrong and I am not covering it up. I did not do what was right. We have settled our troubles forever, and we know now that we love each other better than ever did before."

"It would be pitiful, judge," he pleaded. "To ruin our happiness just at the moment we ourselves have discovered its possibilities. Please discontinue the charge against her, for I swear I never shall prosecute her."

There were tears in the eyes of the judge, as there were in those of others in the room.

"It is for the state to decide," he finally answered. "It can prosecute if I see fit, but"—and he looked suggestively at the assistant state's attorney.

The prosecution responded to the unuttered plea.

"Your honor," he said, "I move to nolle prosequi."

The case is dismissed," said the judge, and the Richeys, their arms locked together, left the court room.

The termination of the criminal case against Mrs. Richey will be followed by the dismissal of a divorce suit started after the shooting.
