Itching and Burning on Face and Throat

Sores Disfigured So He Dreaded to Appear in Public. No Rest Night or Day. Cuticura Ointment Cured.

"Six months ago my face and throat all broke out and turned into a running sore. I did not bother about it at first, but in one week's time the disease had spread so rapidly over my face and throat and the burning itching sores became so painful that I began to seek relief in different medicines, but none seemed to give me any relief. The sores disfigured my face to such an extent that I dreaded to appear in public. I suffered terribly and could get no rest night or day. At last a friend advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I had about given up hope, but thought I would have one more try, and so I used a little Cuticura Ointment, and it helped me from the start. I continued using it and in six weeks' time was completely cured, and can say I would advise anyone suffering from skin disease to use Cuticura Ointment, as it is the best healing balm in the world." (Signed) Roscoe Good, Seven Persons, Alta., Feb. 15, 1911.

Then her cheeks became raw and sore and after trying different remedies found relief only from using Cuticura Soap and Ointment. It lasted six months or more, but after a thorough treatment with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment never had any return." (Signed) Mrs. W. S. Owen, Yakin College, N. C., May 28, 1911.

WHAT METAL WILL DO

THORIUM MAY ADD TIME TO OUR LIVES.

Interesting Experiments Made With Fishes Are Reported by a Writer in One of the Scientific Magazines

The interesting discovery has recently been made by Dr. Werner Von Bolton that the metal thorium has the property of destroying vegetable and bacterial growth, while certain forms of animal life seem to have a prolonged existence under its influence. Thorium, says the Science Conspicuous, causes fungi and even ordinary grass to die prematurely. Grass sprouts at first after treatment with thorium, but dies in a brief time if it is in contact with earth that has been treated with the metal. On the other hand, the lifetime of some fishes is prolonged if thorium is added to their native environment, sea water and sand.

The experiments were carried out with the fish by dividing them into three lots. Two of these lots were placed in water that had been treated with thorium, while the third was left in untreated water. After seven months more than ninety per cent. of the fish in the thorium treated environment were still living, while those in the untreated water died within five weeks. The walls of the vessel containing no thorium were covered with fungus, while the other two vessels were almost free from this growth. The fungus probably kills the fish, and they were, therefore, able to live longer in the vessels where the inimical organisms had been destroyed.

It is not known whether the beneficial effects of thorium on animal life are due to the metal itself or to some other substance that is present in very small quantities. Some of the compounds of thorium have the same property, but to a very much smaller degree. Other metals have been tried, but none has been found to possess this singular influence.

Experiments are being carried out on other animals, and it is hoped that thorium may be found to destroy some of the disease germs that take years from the life of mankind, without seriously affecting the functions of the human organism.

"SELF-STARVATION."

Wealthy Miser Who Picked Bread Out of Gutter.

"He seems to have sat a wedding present of five guineas to someone in New York and yet himself starved to death. He must have been mad," said the Bethnal-green coroner at an inquest on Deon Donnan, 44-45, Kenilworth road, (Ed. Ford, who died from starvation while he had several pounds in his pockets and a considerable amount of money in the bank. Michael Keller, a brother of Cork, said the dead man was formerly an excise officer, but had recently retired. The coroner's officer said that from papers he had found, Keller had handled large sums of money. In October, 1910, he had steel shares to the value of £1,666, and in May, 1911, shares to the value of £1,900 of the Caledonian railway. His cheque book showed that he had sent his brother £4,000 in two cheques. Despite this, a document was found showing that he was applying to the customs authorities for a pension.

The room he occupied was filthy. The man himself was in rags and tatters, and his hair so unkempt that he was taken for eighty years at age instead of sixty. He had not worn a shirt the whole time he had lodged at the place—twelve years. A cheque book showed that he had drawn out £10 in March. Mrs. Elizabeth Stanford, the land lady, said she charged him 3s. 6d. a week for his room, but he owed her somewhere about £10. She had seen him pick up pieces of fish or potatoes, and crusts of bread out of the gutter, and eat them ravenously. Dr. Blaeker Kyle of the infirmary, said death was due to starvation. When brought into the infirmary the man had £13 16s. 0 1/2 on him. The jury returned a verdict that the man died from self-starvation at a time when he had ample means in his possession and a banking account.

USED IN WASHING TIRES.

Expert Advises Motorists Not to Employ Kerosene.

At this season of the year when roads, in consequence of spring showers, are often muddy, most motor cars are coming in for their share of washing. Washing tires and washing a car are two different propositions, says the Michigan tire expert. Water alone should be used to wash tires, and as little of it as necessary. After every run the envelope should be wiped clean with a damp sponge or well-wring cloth. A common mistake made by motorists is to mix kerosene with water. This may be advisable when washing the body of a car to remove mud and dust from the varnish, but it should never be done when washing tires because kerosene eats rubber.

All Went to Sleep.

This sports incident comes from Salt, Switzerland.

An inspector of schools, without any previous warning, visited the village school and found the elderly teacher asleep at his desk and the children departed, having apparently taken French leave. To give the teacher a great surprise and a bad quarter of an hour, the inspector decided to wait until he awoke, and seated himself on a bench in front of the school.

The hours passed and the inspector himself went to sleep. The teacher, on awakening, and seeing who was sleeping before him, quietly left the school for home.

Without entering the schoolroom the coner rpe looked up the school and the lumbering inspector. Several hours later the concierge heard a great noise and, arising himself, opened the door and was greatly surprised to find the angry inspector before him.—Chicago News.

FUTURE OF SOUDAN.

Lord Kitchener Makes Notable Speech at Khartoum.

Lord Kitchener, the new British diplomat, went to Egypt, recently, paid an official visit to Khartoum near the scene of his great victory over the Dervishes in 1896, and was welcomed by the sirdi, who made a speech in reply, according to the London Standard, Lord Kitchener said:

"I thank your excellency, the officials, and also the notables and the inhabitants of the Sudan for the very kind welcome accorded me on this occasion. I need not say how deeply interested I am personally in the future prosperity of this country, and what a great source of satisfaction it is to me that the king has been pleased to place me in a position to do something toward helping forward the work of development which has been so successfully carried out by your excellency ever since you were handed the reins of the governor-generalship of the Sudan."

"I congratulate the people of this country on the recent visit of their majesties to Port Sudan and Sinkat. Their majesties informed me of the great pleasure their reception afforded them, and of the deep impression left on their minds by all they saw, even after the splendid ceremonies in which their majesties had so recently taken a prominent part in India. They feel that the memory of their visit to the Sudan would always be one of the most interesting experiences of their long tour. The king and queen were much touched by the loyal enthusiasm of the sheiks and people, and will always remember them and take the warmest interest in the future of the country."

"It is a well-recognized fact that ever since the reestablishment of the government of the Sudan very satisfactory and steady progress has been made, and with the growing revenue the prosperity and happiness of the people have increased year by year. I particularly wish to emphasize the word 'steady,' and to impress upon you the importance of steady progress. Speculative advantage, which though attractive in appearance, may lead to serious setbacks in the future are to be deprecated. What the country requires is well-considered and careful development of its resources always remembering that we must wait for a far more gradual extension before the full expansion of the valuable and important capabilities of the country will be attained. The future is bright and the good administration existing in the Sudan, of which I am glad to see abundant proofs, will, I feel sure, as years go by, result in a steady extension of the prosperity of the people."

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

In the Spring Most People Need a Tonic Medicine.

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unattractive eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its effect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disgusting eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago; the sharp stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines—you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new, rich blood which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Maud Muller's Poyot.

Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Maud Muller took down the old rake. "I'm getting tired of this evening summer-day stomp," she said. "All the judges have quit riding by and there's so much bottled water now that nobody ever thinks of asking for a drink from the old spring. I guess I'll fool the parody-makers and go to town and turn typewriter. If I can't nail a judge I may grab of a junior partner." And she knocked seven tens out of the rake and flung the handle in the corner.

Most Powerful Poison.

The most powerful poison known is reported to have been extorted by a German chemist from the seeds of the ricinus, the familiar castor oil plant, and has been attracting much attention on account of its remarkable properties. Its power is estimated to be so great that a gram—about one-thirtieth of an ounce—will kill a million and a half guinea pigs.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

UNCLAIMED MONEY IN BANKS.

Millions of Dollars That Owners Never Call For.

Twenty millions of unclaimed money in the corners of British banks—precious gold which nobody owns, and which the banks are naturally pleased to take care of. Gold, more than sufficient to pave every square foot of heathside with sovereigns.

The sum total may be exaggerated, but make a liberal deduction, and you still have many millions to which so rightful owners make a claim. There is no bank in the whole length of Great Britain (or elsewhere) which has not its lists of these bank balances that may be said to go begging. Some have for years, some scarcely worth the trouble of pocketing; some are for amounts running into thousands.

Some years ago, Mr. Goschen's conversion scheme was in the air, it was found that the Bank of England alone had nearly eleven thousand of these dormant accounts. Forty of them had more than $50,000 apiece to their credit; one balance was written in six figures—$907,990. The total at the bottom of the long list was $32,248,875. This amount was very largely made up of unclaimed dividends on government stock.

Scottish banks have, it is said, $45,000,000 of this overlooked gold—English banks at least double this sum. How does it come here? And what becomes of it? It seems inconceivable that so much money for all of which the owners may be never known at some time or other, should be thus lost to sight. A core or more of simple causes account for the seeming impossibility. A man may, for private or business reasons, have accounts with more banks than one. He dies, his executors know nothing of any but his usual bank; the balances at the others remain unclaimed. He may die abroad; or disappear, leaving no clue to his banking affairs; he may even forget that such an account exists. In these and many similar ways—mostly the result of carelessness—money is left in the hands of bankers to swell the dormant funds.

For seven years the bankers keep the accounts open, prepared to pay over the balance to any who can prove title to it. The terms expired, they regard the forgotten gold as their own. Five million dollars of such ownerless money went to build London's splendid law courts. The City, it is said, has more than one magnificent bank building reared from the surplus of material. The Bank of England, one learns, provides pensions for clerks' widows out of such a fund. But, whatever becomes of it, these millions of "mysterious gold" are always growing, fed by man's carelessness or forgetfulness, their secure hiding away in thousands of dusty bank ledgers.

Age Alone Does Not Necessarily Impair Beauty.

London Globe.

Whether the present craze for antiques represents in reality any artistic progress on the part of people in general would be a nice speculation. We fear, in the majority of cases, the acquisition, or attempted acquisition, of "genuine" old furniture, prints, china, and so forth, is merely dictated by a desire to be in the fashion.

It may be argued that even this is so much to the good, since it is better that persons of small or no taste should live in artistic surroundings, even if they are unable to appreciate them. So much may be admitted, but our concern for the moment is rather with the class of people who have some instinct for art, but who in their pursuit of the beautiful and the rare have lost their heads. They have rushed into the extreme of acquiring articles merely because they are "genuine old." Now, age alone does not necessarily imply beauty. An artistic copy of a beautiful object is far more to be desired than the antique, especially if genuinely old, original. But, unfortunately, most of us are such impulsive creatures that in our haste to buy the old we are in danger of forgetting to note whether it is really beautiful as well. The result will probably be that in a few years' time the present craze rooms with priceless specimens of mid-Victorian art.

WORK LONG HOURS.

Morning After Afternoon "Pause"—Two Hours at Noon.

Brocklyn Citizen. In an article on "The German at Home" in the World's Work, the author, J. H. Collins, states that in the matter of the Englishman the German business man works abominably long hours. He and his clerks are at work at eight in the morning, and stop at noon for fifteen minutes to eat a bit of bread and butter, brought in the pocket. At noon two hours are allowed to go back home for a hearty dinner. "In the afternoon is another stop for tea or coffee, after which everybody works through till eight in the evening, so that the German business people are catching trains for home several times a day. The time English people are going to the theatre. "Even in retail shops and in factories the pause, or 'powa,' as it is called in German, is rigidly observed. Workmen stop in the morning and afternoon for bread and beer, served from their canteens, and every retail shop, large or small, has a place where clerks can warm and eat food."

Blind Man's Repartee.

A blind man was passing along the roadway in the darkness of the night with a jar on his shoulder and a lighted lamp in his hand. A peddler some fellow met him, who cried out: "O, fool, since day and night are alike to thee, since darkness and light are as one to the eyes, what use hast thou for this lamp?" But the blind man laughed and answered him: "This lamp is not for me; nor to guide these blind eyes of mine. It is for ignorant fools like thee that they may not knock against me and break my jar."—From "Why the World Laughs," by Charles Johnston.
