and Crew Escaped in the Boats.

THE LOSS IS ESTIMATED AT $20,-

The Iona Was En Route From Sodus Point to Montreal With Soft Coal -It Had Wintered at Kingston.

The steambarge Iona, well-known in this port, having wintered here a couple of seasons, caught fire some time during Saturday night, while on her way from Sodus Point, to Montreal, laden with coal, was almost totally destroyed and sunk, Capt. Paul Hammond and the twelve members of the crew escaped. The mishap occurred at Stoney Island, about twelve ziles out of Sacket's Harbor. News of the affair reached Kingston on Sunday, For the most part the members of the crew belong to Montreal.

The Iona was loaded with soft coal and made a good run out of Sodus Point on Saturday. The cause of the fire could not be ascertained

Later Particulars.

Further particulars of the burning of the Iona have been received. It was a very dirty night and the crew had a bad time of it after they put off in'a lifeboat, and drifted before the gale all night, finally landing at Henderson Harbor, N Y., early on Sunday morning. While al' got safely away, the twelve men were thoroughly exhausted after their long battle with heavy seas during a cold lake storm. That to the lake regulations, which de THE THROAT DOCTORS mand that every vessel shall carry twice sufficient lifeboat accommods tion to carry its crew. The whole crew got into one lifeboat and left At the time the fire broke out the Iona was steaming about fifteen miles north of Oswego, N. Y. with a cargo of 1,000 tons of coal, bound from Sodus Point, N.Y., to Quebec. There were on board at the time Captain Paul Hymond, of Beauharnois, and a crew of twelve men, mostly Canadians, the chief

One lifeboat was sufficient to ac. commodate the crew, but they had to get away so speedily that Captain Hymoud left his clothes and money behind him on the burning vessel, with the result that when he landed at Henderson Harbor he was literally stranded. As the crew pulled away from the ship they watched it burn, and long before they had got out of sight it had burned to the water line and they saw it plunge forward and sink.
