WORLD'S FINEST RUBY

THE TIMUR HAS HAD A FASCINATING CAREER.

History of Stone Over Which a Great Deal of Blood Has Been Shed Is Lost Away Back in the Mists of Indian Folk-Lore—Jewel Now Occupies a Place Among the Gems of the British Crown.

Every schoolboy knows that the celebrated diamond known as the Kohinoor (Mountain of Lights) has formed part of the British regalia since 1856, but the general public has been unaware that the gem known in the days of the Mogul Empire as the Khirad Alam (Tribute of the World) and to European experts as the Timur Ruby, has been included among the crown jewels of England for nearly as many years.

Some experts, indeed, have supposed that it had been lost. It is the largest uncut ruby known, weighing just over 352 carats, uncut but polished, and was probably discovered in one of the old ruby mines of Badakshan.

The romantic history of the jewel has been recently investigated in connection with the Mogul Empire in India. The earliest historical records show that it was seized along with many other precious stones by the Ameer Timur, commonly called Tamerlane by European historians, when he plundered Delhi in 1398.

The great Tartar conqueror stayed in India for little over a year and returned to Samarkand, taking all his booty with him. On his death the ruby descended to his son, Mir Shah Rukh, and in due time to his son and successor, Mirza Ulugh Bek.

By this time the Tartar Empire was on the wane, and in the general dislocation during one of the wars between the Tartars and Persians the ruby came into the possession of the kings of Iran. Shah Abbas I., the greatest of the Safavi Kings of Persia, who in conjunction with the British forces took the island of Ormuz from the Portuguese in 1622, was a constant friend and ally of the Mogul Emperor Jehangir, and presented the ruby to him in 1612.

At that time the gem was inscribed with the names of Timur's son and grandson and of Shah Abbas himself. These inscriptions no longer exist, and it is uncertain whether they have been obliterated in the course of time or were actually removed by the order of Jehangir himself. At any rate, the Emperor at once had the names of himself and father, Akbar the Great, engraved upon it.

Authentic records show that when Jehangir's favorite wife, Nur Jehan, remonstrated with him for spoiling the gem by this inscription, he replied: "This jewel will more certainly hand my name to posterity than any written history. The House of Timur may fall, but as long as there is a King this jewel will be his"—meaning, of course, that the possession of so valuable a stone would always remain with the Suleiman of Hindustan.

It is interesting to reflect that throughout all the vicissitudes of Indian history this prediction has been fulfilled to the letter. The ruby next passed to Shah Jehan, who also had his name inscribed upon it, and finally had it placed in the famous Peacock Throne. On his deposition by his son Aurangzeb, or Alamgir Shah, the gem went with the rest of the jewels.

Following the example of preceding Mogul owners, Aurangzeb added his name and the date on which he acquired it. The last of the Delhi emperors to inscribe his name was Mahomed Farukh Siyar. In the reign of his successor Nadir Shah invaded India and sacked Delhi (1739). The loot carried away to his capital, then Ispahan, included the following inscription engraved in the cryptic style affected by Persian scholars of the day:

This (is) the ruby from among the twenty-five thousand genuine jewels of the King of Kings the Sultan Sahib Qiran, which in the year 1153 from the (collection of) jewels of Hindustan reached this place.

The date is that of the Hijra era and corresponds with 1740 A.D. Sahib Qiran ("the Lord of the auspicious conjunction") is the name by which Timur has always been known in Asia and the Moslem world.

The latest name on the jewel is that of Ahmad Shah, commonly known as Abdali or Durrani, who at the time of Nadir Shah's assassination in 1747, held an important command in his victorious army. On hearing of the murder he attempted to seize the throne, but succeeded only in securing a large amount of booty, which he took with him when he marched south at the head of his Uzbeg troops and founded the Kingdom of Afghanistan.

On his death in 1773 his son, Timur Shah, succeeded to the throne of Kabul, and the ruby eventually passed to the latter's youngest son, Shah Sujah. On his expulsion by Dost Mahomed he took refuge in the Punjab, and Maharaja Ranjit Singh forced him to surrender both the Kohinoor and the Timur Ruby.

On the annexation of the Punjab in 1849, the board of administration took over all the state jewels. The Kohinoor was sent direct by the hands of a special officer to England and at once delivered to the late Queen Victoria. Some of the more valuable gems and articles found in the Toshakhana (treasure house), including the Timur Ruby, was packed up in Lahore and sent via Karachi and Bombay to London.

They were all displayed in the Great Exhibition of 1851, and when this was closed the Court of Directors of the East India Company presented the ruby to Queen Victoria. — London Times.

Try Skin Absorption Instead of Cosmetics (From the Woman Militant.) The constant use of rouge and powder invites a coarsened, roughened condition of the skin, eruptions, enlarged pores and wrinkles. If you've learned this from experience, suppose you try cosmetics, and try what I recommend.

Ask your druggist for an ounce of ordinary mercerized wax and begin using this tonight. Apply like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. Keep this up for a week or two. The wax will literally absorb the coarse, colorless or bluish-tinted skin, so that gradually as not to discommodate you at all. Just as gradually the clear, velvety, naturally tinted under-skin comes to the surface, and mercerized wax becomes your everlasting friend. For those wrinkles and large pores, make a face bath by dissolving an ounce of powdered salicylic acid in a half-pint of water. This has remarkable astringent and tonic properties, and beneficial results come quickly.
