Eczema Always Burning and Itching

Mr. N. Ontigu.

Used Box of Cuticura Ointment and It Completely Disappeared.

"I have suffered from eczema for two years. The trouble began on one arm where there appeared a red spot of about a five-cent size, and it always widened, all the time itching and burning. The first day I didn't care, but seeing that it gained in size, I tried — Ointment and — Ointment, but both without success. It was always burning and itching. Having seen in the newspaper the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies, I tried a little, and seeing that it improved, I bought a box of the Cuticura Ointment. After having used one box, my eczema completely disappeared. The Cuticura Ointment should be kept in every home." (Signed) N. Ontigu, Mariville, Que., Jan. 14, 1911.

FOND OF DIFFICULTIES

MISS AGNES LAUT HAS THE SPIRIT OF THE PIONEER.

Distinguished Canadian Authoress is of Scottish Descent and the Blood of the Early Adventurers is Strong in Her Veins—She Has Competed With Men in Many Capacities in Journalism.

In pioneer work the fortitude and adventurous spirit of woman have usually been taken for granted or included with masculine effort in such a fashion as to obscure the feminine element. The women who came out to Canada a century ago and who helped to make homes in the wilderness were made of stern stuff, and their virtues of endurance and industry are too lightly regarded in this age of machine-made instruments and speeding automobiles, when "hurry" seems to be the universal motto, says Jean Graham in The Globe.

The world has always been ready to admire the adventurous spirit in men, whether it be a dashing Cavalier, Prince Rupert or a sober-minded Puritan Miles Standish. It has not been so ready to recognize that there are women also for whom the untrodden paths and far trails have an irresistible fascination. Our pioneer great-grandmothers may have come to this country as the wives or daughters of men eager for toil in a new world, rather than from any personal desire for a home in the western world. Yet I believe many of them enjoyed the trails and new phases of life in the unmade Dominion with the zest of the true adventurer.

There are women who love exploration for its own sake, and who enjoy to the full the life of prairie or hill-country. They are not at all masculine in the objectionable sense in which that term in sometimes applied to women who have ambitions aside from the domestic sphere; but they have a kind of boyish love of "fresh woods and pastures new." Such a brave spirit was Agnes Deans Cameron, who lately passed from all earthly wanderings to rest.

"Beneath the low green tent, whose curtain never outward swings," such a nature is the inheritance of another Canadian woman writer, Miss Agnes C. Laut, who is never happier than when exploring the prehistoric caves of Arizona or the far reaches of a British Columbia stream.

Miss Laut, like Miss Cameron, is of Scottish descent, which means a great deal in a country whose rivers, from Fraser to Mackenzie, show where the venturesome Gael has been. She has the innate perseverance of the race which delights in a "deficiency," and which finds relaxation in theological argument. She has proved worth the greatest enjoyment in the world.

Miss Laut belongs to Ontario by birth, but went to Winnipeg when a child and is consequently claimed as a typical western woman in intellectual briskness and ambition. Her maternal grandfather was the late Rev. Principal George D.D. of Queen's University, Kingston, and she is thus related to Mrs. H. S. Strath and Mr. W. K. George of Toronto. Miss Laut was an industrious student as a schoolgirl, and more than one instructor tells her of early determination to succeed in literary achievement. She was educated at Manitoba University and became an editorial writer on The Manitoba Free Press in 1893. The New York Evening Post, The Review of Reviews, The Montreal Herald, The World's Work, and Outing have also claimed her editorial activities.

There are some natures for whom the story of past accomplishments has an infinite fascination; there are others who seem to possess little of that historic sense which can revive the scenes of long ago and bring back the figures which flashed along in the voyager's canoe or which journeyed into the silent white places of the north. Miss Laut seems to unite the historic imagination with an intensely practical grasp of present affairs, so that she is equally enthusiastic over the romance of the historic struggle between two great trading companies and over the account of a west engineering enterprise of the twentieth century. However, this Scottish-Canadian of many ambitions admits that research work among the old records is one of the most engrossing occupations on earth.

Years ago Miss Laut obtained access to the Hudson Bay literature in England, and found material for a library of good stories, and with characteristic spirit and energy, she turned the unvarnished entries to good account in the novels "Lords of the North" and "Heralds of Empire," followed by "The Story of the Trapper," "Vikings of the Pacific," "Like Kipling's "William the Conqueror," she likes "men who do things," and delights in telling of the work and travel of a Vancouver, a Mackenzie or a Radisson. Miss Laut has been an eminently successful novelist, but she says that, financially, her history, "The Conquest of the Great Northwest," has been her most satisfactory book, which may surprise many of us who have considered this an age given over to fiction.

When she was asked how she managed to travel so far and write so much and yet keep so cheerily well, Miss Laut replied: "By disappearing for about three months of the year into the wilds. In her case it is the last word Miss Laut refers especially to the great Painted Desert of the southwest, where dwell the Hopi descendants of the ancient Aztecs. Here this daughter of the Dominion revels in warm days, cool nights and picturesque civilization—a relief, indeed, from the busy life of a continent in the making. But she enjoys it all immensely both work and holidays, and gives one the impression of splendid vitality, without nerves and without fear. She declares that she desires nothing better than "the glorious good game of being all alive and working."

QUEEN MARY'S HOME.

Opened With Money to the "Mary Fund," and Will Do a Lot of Good.

Barr House is the name painted on the wicket gate of the holiday home for working girls at Whitestable (Kent), purchased with a portion of the "Mary's" coronation gift.

No formal ceremony, just a hearty "come right in" from the super-intendent will welcome the first girl guests when they "invade" Queen Mary's Home.

On a recent afternoon a correspondent loitered up a flower-bordered path, passed a moss-covered sundial circled with rose trees, and halted wondrously before the restored fifteenth century barn. The walls were of red bricks interrupted with frequent black beams, the bottle glass windows where white-curtained and sash tint, while the oak entrance door, elaborate with worm-eaten carvings, led into a hall reminiscent of Tudor logs and boars' heads and punch bowls.

That great floor, cushion and the tapestries on the wall came down this morning from Buckingham Palace, said Miss Campbell, lady superintendent, and an old campaigner in matters of organization, as she sat drinking tea in a room of the china service chosen by the Queen herself.

"The Queen has been most kind. She has taken a personal interest in all the arrangements which have been going on for nearly twelve months. We are venturing to hope she will pay us a visit some time during the summer."

"Our girls are to have a splendid holiday. Breakfast at nine, and no rules worth mentioning. We have our own bathing but only a hundred yards or so away from here, and there is a tennis court and croquet lawn. There will also be organized excursions for those who care to join in."

"The girls are all members of the London Girls' Club Union."

"Some are factory hands, some are shop assistants—some are vegetarians. Fourteen of them will come at a time, and each group will stay for a fortnight. The season will last right on till October."

The grounds comprise an orchard, where the girl guests may pick fruit as they will, a kitchen garden, and a pool shaded with 200 birch, and an old summer house, and a tank green with rust, dated 1700.

Boil Penguins For Their Oil.

In the capture of penguins for their oil there is being carried on quite an industry at Macquarie Island, which is about half way between Tasmania and the Antarctic continent. The island belongs to the state of Tasmania and has an area of about 25,000 acres, being about 25 miles long and five miles wide. It is leased by the Tasmanian Government to Joseph Hatch, who has established the penguin oil works there.

There are probably 80,000,000 penguins on the island, so that the stock to be drawn from seems almost limitless. There are also a large number of sea elephants about its shores. The oil is obtained from the penguins by boiling the carcasses in digesters capable of dealing with 200 birds at a time. It is barreled up and sold to binder twine makers in Australia and New Zealand.

Macquarie Island is about 750 miles southeast of Hobart. It is barren, being covered only with tussocky grass. Whaling ships visiting there have introduced rabbits and Maori hens, which are now quite prolific. The Mawson Antarctic expedition from Australia has established a wireless station there, and daily messages are now being received at Hobart.

A Chance He Missed.

Joseph Chamberlain and the late Sir William Harcourt were fierce political rivals, but warm personal friends. On one occasion in 1886 Mr. Chamberlain was staying at Malwood, Sir William's home. The guests were inscribing their names in the visitors' book, one page of which was already full, when it came to Mr. Chamberlain's turn.

"Now is the great chance of your life, Chamberlain," said Sir William. "You will be able to turn over a new leaf."

"I will be hanged if I do!" retorted Mr. Chamberlain, and he turned the book around and wrote his name on the margin of the full page.

Interested in Agriculture.

The British Royal Agricultural Society has secured a very distinguished president for next year. The Earl of Northbrook is the head of the great Baring family, to which Lord Cromer and Lord Revelstoke also belong. The family owes its rise to John Baring son of Franz Baring, a minister of the Lutheran Church at Bremen. This John Baring settled at Larkbeere, near Exeter, in 1747, and rapidly attained prosperity as a merchant and cloth manufacturer. Francis, his third son, became the first baronet, and many of the London family which has given so many distinguished servants to the state.

"A POET'S ROMANCE."

Robert Browning's Son Dies in Town of Asolo.

The death of Mr. Barrett Browning, the only son of the famous poet, which has occurred at the Italian town of Asolo as the result of asthma, recalls the romantic love story of Robert and Elizabeth Browning. Elizabeth Barrett's father had an almost insane objection to any of his three daughters marrying, and Robert Browning's addresses to her were perforce kept secret. In 1833, Sept. 24, 1846, the two were secretly married at St. Mary's Church in London. A week later Elizabeth, slipping out of her father's house, departed with her husband for Italy. In April, 1847, they took up their residence in Florence. Of "Asolo Guidi" the morning where their only son was born in 1849, Mrs. Browning wrote, "We live for nothing or next-to-nothing, have six beautiful rooms and a kitchen, three of them quite palace rooms, and opening on a terrace opposite the grey wall of a church called San Bartolomeo." The name "Wiedemann," which was bestowed on their child, was the maiden name of Robert Browning's mother, the daughter of a German shipmaster, who had settled in Dundee and married a Scottish wife. Robert Browning loved his mother passionately, and her death, coming soon after his son's birth, was a terrible blow to him.

Mrs. Browning's father, whose family name was Moulton, and who had taken that of Barrett on succeeding to estates in Jamaica, never forgave his daughter for her flight. When she returned to England with her husband and child he refused to see her, and when she wrote pleading that he would at least kiss the child, the letter went unanswered. On the death of his wife at Florence in 1861 Browning took his son to London to be educated. The boy was brought up in his father's house at 19 Warwick crescent, the poet having resolved to train his son for the university without sending him to a public school. The profession eventually chosen by Mr. Barrett Browning was that of an artist. The poet himself had at intervals exhibited a strong artistic bent outside literature, and occasionally suspended his other work to devote himself to modelling. The early successes of his son as a painter gave him great pleasure. In 1887, the younger Browning married Miss Fannie Coddington, an American lady, and the two eventually resided in the Palazzo Rezonice, at Venice, where the poet breathed his last.

The records of the lives of the Brownings show the deep affection and love for their son. When Mrs. Browning's "Aurora Leigh" was nearly finished, the Brownings left Florence for England, and on the journey the box containing the manuscript was lost at Marseilles. In the same box were also packed velvet suits and lace collars for which the little boy had made a brave appearance before his English relatives. His mother's distress at the loss of her son's wardrobe far outweighed her concern for the manuscript. Happily the box was recovered. Robert Browning, referring to the composition of "Aurora Leigh," wrote, "My wife used to write it and lay it down to hear our child's spell." Asolo was the scene not only of Robert Browning's "Aurora Leigh," but of his equally famous poems, "Pippa Passes" and "Sordello." The poet's last birth country the remains of the beautiful Caterina Cornaro, the last Queen of Cyprus, after the forced resignation of her kingdom to the Venetians in 1489. The ruins of the castle that she inhabited are one of many old-time relics in the town, which is surrounded by a wall with medieval turrets.

The Only One of Its Kind.

On an evening somewhere about the end of the sixteenth century a traveler from Sweden might have been observed at the door of the Rose Theatre in London. He was going to see a new piece called "Titus Andronicus," and in order to follow it in the native language he bought a copy of the play, price twelve cents, at the theatre door. When he went home he decided to bring the book with him to show his wife and friends what strange stuff the foreigner ranted. For 300 years it was preserved and in 1904, being discovered in the home of a countrywoman, was transferred for safety to the Lund University. The book is the only one of its kind known to exist.

A Silent Land.

In the rainless island of Australia there is a silence of the grave. This deathlike silence has a peculiarly depressing effect. If two men are camped and one of them goes to a distant township to get provisions while the other remains behind to look after the camp the man who is to remain says to his mate in forcible good fields language: "Now, Bill, don't you be long away. You know what kind of a place this is to live in by yourself." If his mate is away for two or three days the silence gets upon the man's nerves, and in the end he shouts in order to make a noise, and then he is afraid of the sound of his own voice.

Tin.

Who first found tin? There is a legend among the Cornish miners that St. Piran, an Irish hermit, was the discoverer. His ancient church in the parish of Perranabuloe, in Cornwall, had been burnt by sea many years ago, has recently been repaired. Cornish miners still keep the feast of St. Piran, who, according to the fable, first found tin, forgetting that their forefathers had long previously sold it to the Phoenicians. Possibly the legend points to the fact that the Irishman was a skillful metallurgist.

The Solemn Veddahs.

The most solemn people in the world are the Veddahs of Ceylon, among whom laughter is unknown. Once a traveler was told in answer to an inquiry that they never saw anything to laugh at.

$3.50 Recipe Free For Weak Men

Send Name and Address Today— You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excess, unnatural drainage, and loss of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and vitality, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men and women, and is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow man to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop dragging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest-acting restorative, upbuilding, SPORT-FORTIFYING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: "Dear Sir, please send me a copy of your splendid recipe in a plain ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $20.00 to $50.00 merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it gratis & free."

Upson McConnell, a resident of Greenbush, is dead, aged forty-one years. A widow and five children survive.
