"SANITY OF JESUS"

A LECTURE BY PROF. JOHN MACNAUGHTON

Before Queen's Theological Alumni Conference on Thursday Evening—The Lecture Was a Most Masterly One.

Professor John Macnaughton, of McGill University, was welcomed by a large and appreciative audience on Thursday evening in convocation hall, when he delivered a masterly discourse on "The Sanity of Jesus." It is impossible to do full justice to such a masterly treatment of the subject, in a brief report, and even a full statement would not convey a complete idea of the qualities of insight, courage and reverence which gave evidences and power to his brilliant presentation of a great theme. Some might think that the title was strange and rather sensational, but, as the lecturer pointed out, the allusion was not to insanity, though some in His own days, regarded Jesus as insane, and some conventional people would have similar feelings if He appeared now, but to His clear, comprehensive, well-balanced, spiritual view of life, Paul maintained that Jesus could meet the legitimate demands of the pragmatic Jesus and the speculative Greeks, and that claim has been justified.

Some have held that His doctrine could be accepted by Jesus and others have spent much time in allegorizing or transforming it, in studying the form and substance of this teaching, we must concede (1) that Jesus did expect an early end of the present order of things; (2) that this did not take place; (3) that this event was not a localized episode that can easily be separated from the essence of His teaching. It cannot be pulled off like the skin of an orange; in it was wrapped, in spite of the aloof survival, one of His constant convictions. He was who's man, not a bundle of old Hebrew cloths with jewels of price loosely pinned on his garments. We cannot separate the two elements easily, but must try to do full justice to the spiritual principle and the external form. There was clearness in His faith all through, and not merely as an interval of eschatological sleep-walking. These "lost things" were very real for His nation was indeed facing its last great crisis.

The man who sees duty must be earnest in the face of these lost things; must see what does and what does not matter, must clear his mind of out. In contrast with Him the Pharisees, with all their deadly solemnity, were not so earnest, and there is no wonder that they regarded Him as a wild fanatic. He died young, having lived like a man; no flimsy pillar is the fit symbol of His life. Many critics forget that He was not Man, an abstraction, or a catalogue of the virtues, but a real man who faced the realities of life. It is well to remember that nearly all His life He had to be a carpenter. Being a Jew He did not need to preach the dignity of labor but he lived it and in those days of silent preparation did His work well and had both time and courage to think, and to see clearly the working of God in the world.

Then when the great test came He dared to face it. This also was a definite limited task, to attempt to save His own nation, but He faced it and understood it in such a way that it became a world-wide significance. A real crisis was at hand, the nation was in the swirl of the rapids; the roar of the cataract was in His ears. His estimate of the nearness and the tremendous import of the crisis was right. We can only understand His treatment of the great themes by combining the ideal element in His life and the poetry in His nature. Jewish theology that had become dry and fantastic received new life at His hands and becomes the symbol of eternal truths. If the nation could have accepted His thought of God and religion, the great catastrophe might have been averted, but it was not to be. The Rev. N. M. Leckie, representing Prof. Macnaughton's former students, moved the vote of thanks, which was seconded by the Rev. D. W. Best, and after a few words from Vice-Principal Watson, carried with great enthusiasm.

Boston, Trans. — She entered the grocery store with a jar of marmalade in her hand and fire in her eye. "See here," she said to the clerk. "I bought this stuff because the card in your window says it's an excellent substitute for butter."

"Well, ma'am, so it is."
"Well, it's a grand substitute, I must say! I tried frying a bit of fish with it this morning and the taste was so awful I had to throw the fish all away."

DROPPED DEAD AT ODESSA.
Edward Snider's Sudden End on Friday Morning.
Edward Snider, a resident of Odessa, dropped dead at the farm of Robert Aylesworth, two miles south of that village about eleven o'clock on Friday morning. He was a man of about fifty-seven years of age, born in Odessa, the son of the late Valentine Snider.

The sudden death of the deceased was due to heart failure, from which he had been suffering for five years. He followed the threshing business for some years, and had ridden out to the Aylesworth farm, Friday morning, on his bicycle, in his usual health. He was in the employ of John Morrison, of Odessa. In religion he was a Methodist.

The deceased is survived by his wife, and one son and one daughter, Claude in the United States army, and Mrs. John Wheeler, of Watertown, N. Y. Adkin Snider and Hartman Snider, of Odessa, brothers, also survive.

ELECTED WARD CHAIRMANS.

The Sub-Division Chairmans Will be Next Chosen.

The liberals of Kingston had a short meeting in the Reform rooms, Golden Lion block, last evening. Lieut.-Col. Kent, president, occupied the chair. The chief purpose of the gathering was to elect the ward chairmans and this was successfully accomplished, the following being chosen: Sydenham ward, Patrick Moran; Ontario ward, N. C. O'Connor; St. Lawrence ward, R. F. Elliott; Cataract ward, Ald. J. J. Hart; Frontenac ward, Dr. D. E. Mundell; Rideau ward, T. A. Carson; Victoria ward, J. O. Hutton; Portsmouth, J. Halliday. The election of sub-division chairman will follow on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of next week, when the whole executive will be complete and business will be proceeded with forthwith. The executive was given power to fill any vacancy that should occur. Other matters of an interesting character were considered and arrangements made, it is hoped, for some public meeting during the winter. The gathering dispersed shortly after nine o'clock quite enthusiastic over the outlook for liberals in both federal and provincial affairs.

MATE ON THE TUG PROCTOR.

Was Formerly on the Steamer Island Wanderer.

Joseph Longton, mate on the tug Proctor, whose two barges in tow, sank about twenty miles from Sackett's Harbor, N.Y., early Wednesday morning, was formerly mate on the steamer Island Wanderer, which is on the Cape Vincent-Kingston route. Mr. Longton about Oct. 1st. Proctor about Oct. 1st. His other members of the crew related details of the affair to some of the crew of the steamer Wanderer. It appears that the tug Proctor, with the three barges in tow, were running down to Ogdensburg, in a heavy gale, and the barges were beginning to drift in shore. A signal was given for the Proctor to put on more speed. When the tug responded the strain pulled the tow posts out of the H. B., and she and the Menominee were cast adrift from the barge But-It is believed that the number of those drowned stands at seven, instead of four, as reported. It is stated that three young men boarded the barge H. B. at Oswego and were working their way down to Ogdensburg. Their names were not known.

FORESTERS' SOCIAL EVENT.

A Visit From Some of the High Officers.

Court Frontenac, no. 9, I. O. F., at its meeting on Thursday evening, was favored by a visit from several high court officers, who participated in the programme. Addresses were given by Alexander Smith of Cornwall, high chief ranger; Cep. Mitchell of Toronto, superintendent of supreme court organization work; G. L. Dickinson of Manotick, high secretary. Simon Oberdorffer, the oldest member of the Independent Order of Foresters in Kingston, also spoke, with James H. Glenelhan of Toronto, organizer of supreme court, and Robert Sutherland of this city.

Mr. Mitchell, who was present at the concert under the auspices of the order in the city hall, last winter, impressed upon the members the splendid financial position of the Foresters. Those who took part in the musical programme were: John Murray, J. Parker, W. Hehner and J. A. Scott. A goodly number of the Companies were present, and served refreshments.

Overrun With Officials.

Catholic Register.

With a population about the same as Scotland, Ireland is saddled with a total force twice as large, and pays $5,000,000 a year more for its upkeep. Her judicial system costs her $1,000,000 a year more than Scotland's, her total cost of government is nearly twice as much, and she supports five times as many officials. If she cannot do better than that with home rule it is a hard case indeed.

It Does Seem Queer.

Montreal Gazette.

Armand Lavergne is to be sent to the Balkans as Canada's military attaché at the onset of war. It seems that Armand is a captain of militia. His aversion to naval warfare doesn't extend to military operations. But doesn't it seem strange that Bourassa's chief lieutenant should desire to be drawn into "the vortex of European militarism?"
