COURTING IN CHURCH,

ing Chaperones.

When the Rev. F. B. Meyer, England's foremost nonconformist clerie, opened a north of England chapel lately he said he hoped to hear the galleries were quite filled with young people very soon, even if they indulged in a little courting at times.

Now the Rev. George Hooper, another well-known minister, who has taken charge of the Lady Lane mission in one of the prorest quarters of London, has gone one better in his arrangements to mix love, domesticity and religion. He wants to attach to his church a number of women who will act as chaperones to young people courting at the chapel, a lawyer to give free advice two evenings a week, a housemaid to teach the congregation how to make beds, and a cook who will show the women how to give their families simple but wellcooked meals.

Bed-making, in fact, is to be made a speciality. "A great many women." said the parson to a reporter, "have no more idea of making a bed properly than they have of flying. The Act of a Gentleman.

.In Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft's 'Reminiscences" there is a story told by Mr. Charles Collette which is beautifully and very strikingly illustrative of true etiquette. A young soldier in an English regiment had been promoted from the ranks and given a commission in another regiment. Before joining his new command he was, according to custom invited to a farewell dinner by the officers of his old regiment, placed, as the guest of the evening, on the right of the colonel, and helped to all the dishes first. He was a fine young fellow, but little used to the ways of the polite world and the manners of other dining-tables than the humble mess of those days in the ranks. The colonel, one of the truest types of gentlemen, did his best to put his

The soup was served, and then came the servant to the guest's side, holding a large howl which contained simply lumps of ice. The weather was hot, for this happened in India, and cold drinks were an unspeakable boon. The newly-made officer stared at the bowl. The servant asked: "Ice, sir?" The colonel chatted merrily to him on his left. Others of the party began to see a dilemma.

"Ice, sir?" again asked the servant. The guest in ignorant desperation, took a portion of the ice and put it in his soup. A smile played lightly on the faces of some of the younger officers, when the bowl was offered with the guest, and without moving a muscle of his face he also dropped a piece of ice into his soup. Those who came afterwards, however, took their cue from their colonel or let the bowl pass; and the young man breathed a sigh of relief as he thought that after all he had done the right
