QUEER LONDON TRADES

METROPOLIS ABOUNDS IN REMARKABLE LINES OF WORK.

The Shabbos Goye or Sabbath Christian Woman is a Familiar Figure in the Jewish Quarter, and the Cadger of Rag Ends Earns a Good Livelihood—Pub. Nurses Get Pennies and Drinks.

Strolling up Cheetham Hill, the Hebrew quarter of Manchester, one day, I saw an old friend, says a writer in London Ideas. As we stood at a corner telling the tale to each other, there passed us an old and determined-looking woman. My friend, who is a Hebrew, saw my smile and said: "She is a good, hard-working creature."

"You know her?"
"Yes," he replied, smiling. "She is a 'Shabbos Goye'."

"Don't you think there might be danger in smoking such things?" He grinned at me as he said: "Lor, governor, I ain't a-join' to smoke 'em, I've a better plan nor that, I have."

As I passed, looking I saw that the nurse was no longer dry—she was picked up in the course of the night. A case of kindness being cruel, the swipes being responsible for the nurse being swamped.

It is a common sight to see, just as the curtain rises in any London hall or theatre, quite a number of young fellows rising from their seats and politely offering them to somebody who has just arrived. When I first noticed this unusual display of courtesy on the part of ordinary working lads, I felt shame for the men in the pit.

LOOK at the meanest way to earn a living was revealed to me by a friend of mine who happens to be on the police force. The "Nark," "Stool-pigeon," or "Grass," is one who, for sundry reasons, wishes to "keep in" with the force, and incidentally to keep out of their hands. He is usually one who knows what life at Government expense is like, and knowing the profession of thieving to its uttermost limits, is naturally well acquainted with its members. This knowledge he turns to account when the chance offers, and many a highly sensational arrest has occurred being accomplished by the useful little gnat of the Nark. He is hated both by the thieves and the police; and to bear the suspicion of being a nark is about the lowest depth to which even a jail-bird can fall. It is dangerous, too; many a nark has paid for his "splitting" on a pal with his life, and the very least they ever escape with, when once discovered at their vile game, is a hiding of such a nature as to make the nark seek for a more honorable means of earning a living.

Literary Dislikes.
It has been pointed out with some surprise that the late W. S. Gilbert had a strong dislike for Jane Austen, but a correspondent of The New York Evening Post reminds us that Mark Twain had a similar antipathy. He said once that "a library that does not contain Jane Austen's works is a good library even if it hasn't another book in it."

DONKEYS IN INDIA.

They Are Hired in Drove at Three Cents a Day.

Donkeys, donkeys, donkeys — and still more donkeys—coming through our garden gate. What was the meaning of it? Grey donkeys, white donkeys, a few large donkeys, many small donkeys, any and every kind of donkey, possessing one attribute in common—that of a lean and hungry look. Did I say, one attribute—no, there was another. They were all laden in the same way. Each had what for a better word I will call panniers made of coarse sack or string bags, containing a few stones.

Had a tiger suddenly walked in at the garden gate, or a leopard, I should not have been so surprised, though considerably alarmed. But then I knew tigers were found in India, and I didn't know that donkeys were in the habit of roving around in companies and battalions. Hence, my surprise at this sudden visitation of forty or fifty of them.

At length appeared a ragged, lean, brown figure—the man in charge. His garment consisted of a dirty loin cloth, a ragged waistcoat, and, as apology for a turban, a piece of rag twisted round his head. By dint of most gentle persuasion, aided by a stout stick, he managed to eject them from the garden.

Map and Charts.
Anaximander of Miletus is generally supposed to have been the originator of geographical and celestial charts, about 570 B.C. Modern sea charts were brought to England by Bartholomew Columbus to illustrate his brother's theory of a western continent. This was about the year 1480. The first tolerably accurate map of England was drawn by George Lilly, who died in 1559. Gerard Mercator published an atlas of maps in 1595, but it is only within the last fifty years or so that we have had really scientific charts of the earth's surface. It was, of course, impossible to have had such maps in the olden time.

A Vile Slander.
One of the curiosities of the British House of Commons, very rarely seen, was Eric Drax, for many years member for a Dorsetshire borough. Once at a general election on the day previous to the nomination he put out the following address to his constituents: "Electors of Wareham! I understand that some evil-disposed person has been circulating a report that I wish my enemies and other persons dependent upon me to vote according to their conscience. This is a dastardly lie, calculated to injure me. I have no wish of the sort. I wish and intend that these persons shall vote for me."

A Lost Diamond.
Olive Schreiner, the author of "An African Farm," who was brought up in Africa, said that she and her brothers and sisters had as one of their playthings a bright stone that they called the candle stone. It was about the size of a walnut and would flash in a bright and singular way when held up to the light. Not until the children had grown up and the candle stone had been lost for years did any of them remember that it must really have been a huge diamond.

Northern Australia.
Australia's northern territory is the only large unpeopled tract of habitable land on the globe. It is six times the area of the state of Victoria. The country is fertile and is watered by numerous splendid rivers.

A Floating "Mouvy."
A floating cinematograph theatre, consisting of a ship 164 feet long, is a popular attraction at Netherlands Harbor, Cape Town.

FIGHTING IGNORANCE.

British Viscountess Tells of Her Training Scheme.

The Viscountess Escher has inaugurated a new movement among women of Britain by starting a nation-wide course of home nursing and first aid. This new idea, which was recently explained by the viscountess herself in the following article in The London Daily Express, will be of interest to the women of Canada in these days when questions of Imperial safety are in the air.

I think it was Major du Maurier's play, "An Englishman's Home," which first inspired me to start my classes on home nursing and first aid, which will begin again this month. The scene where Major du Maurier depicts the utter incapability of Mr. Brown's daughter to help a dying man, because they were never taught, brought home to me how absolutely helpless most women are in cases of sudden illness in the home.

There is no need for those who pass the examinations to enter a voluntary aid detachment, although many choose to do so. All that I desire that no Englishwoman shall be found wanting on the field—if necessity arise—or in the home.

Cleopatra's Mummy.
Where does Cleopatra's body rest? Scarcely a layman who would not answer, "Why, in Egypt!" After her cajoneries, she writes, her life of intense if not very exalted loves, Cleopatra was laid in one of the loveliest tombs that has ever been fashioned by the hand of man. But what a change 2,000 years has brought about! Today an ugly mummy, with an emblematic bunch of decayed wheat and a coarse comb tied to its head—a mere roll of tightly swathed dust—lies crumpled in a hideous glass case at the British Museum. It is Cleopatra, the once great queen, a Venus in charm, beauty and love—London Spectator.

A Nose Tax.
A "nose tax" was in the ninth century exacted by the Danes from the householders in Ireland. It was so called not because it was levied on noses, but from the fact that a failure to pay was punished by slitting the nose from tip to eyebrow. It was continued during thirteen years, when the householders, objecting to this treatment of their nasal ornaments, rose in rebellion, massacred all the Danes in Ireland and put an end to the nose slitting.

Finds Scouts in Japan.
Lieut.-General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, who has returned to London after a journey around the world in the interests of the boy scout movement, says the authorities in Japan are making a close study of the movement with a view to its adoption for educational purposes.

King's Congratulations.
Mrs. Edmond, of Cardiff, Wales, who celebrated her 103rd birthday, received the following telegram: "The King is glad to be able again to send you his congratulations on your birthday, and trusts you may continue to enjoy good health and happiness.—Fonsonby."

Nielsen Forecasts.
To make a monsoon forecast the weather prophet of the Indian Government must study the meteorological phenomena of Africa, South America and Australia as well as those of the Himalayas and Central Asia.
