IF QUEEN'S STUDENT COURTS DO NOT ACT

And Stop Street Depredations—The Senate Threatens To Take Over the Powers Delegated To the Student Courts.

By Our Student Correspondent. Trouble is brewing at Queen's now after Saturday night's exploits. On Tuesday afternoon, the senate, including Principal Gordon, met the officers of all the societies and courts representing the students, in the different faculties, and discussed what was to be done after the recent street exhibition, not only to punish offenders but also to prevent a recurrence of such doings. The whole matter resolved itself into a question as to whether Queen's students are to possess the unique quality of being a self-governing body, or must present conditions make it necessary for the student judicial affairs to pass into the hands of the senate. Such a step would be a sad blow to the renowned traditions of Queen's, her morals, and democracy, but matters have come to a point where the courts of Queen's must throw off their lethargy and assist themselves, or the senate must step in.

This was emphasized by members of the senate but they also showed a deep desire that the latter be not necessary, and the opinion of most of the officers representing the students seemed to indicate that they thought they were quite capable of coping with the situation and were prepared to verify their assertions.

The question was raised how far are the student bodies responsible for the actions of students outside the college limits? No fine line can be drawn here, but in a case of an organized rush, this certainly comes under the power of the student courts who should hold themselves responsible, but in instances of a small group of individuals, it was the opinion of the majority at the meeting that in cases of misconduct the city should take it upon itself to enforce the law as applied to citizens. And again in spontaneous rushes, a disturbance like that of Saturday night, the blame should not be allowed to rest on students alone as it was pointed out seventy per cent of those participating were city hoodlums.

The blame of recent misconduct of students, it was suggested, lay in the fact that increased numbers have made it impossible to regulate affairs as was so aptly done ten or twelve years ago, when the college law was so strictly enforced that the senate had to interfere, and also in the improper initiation and education of freshmen, who are usually the ringleaders in rough work, in respect to college decorum.

The question as to whether students have certain liberties in the city was answered by the statement that they had, as the people and officials of Kingston looked with leniency on their actions, but when these liberties were taken as licenses, they must be stopped and it is the duty of the college to stop them.

There is no doubt the courts at the college have degraded, and do not meet their requirements, but this crisis has stirred the members up, and the senate has been assured that a change will take place for the better, so this body has decided to allow the management of the students to rest with the courts, and if they are incompetent, then it will take over the authority.

It remains now with the courts to follow up their resolutions. Some different arrangements may be made, such as appointing a central court connected with the A.M.S. to take care of cases not confined to any one faculty. All eyes are now turned on the courts and it is up to them to answer the question. What are you going to do about it?

CONFESES THAT HE TESTIFIED FAISELY TO COMMISSION

Concerning Guard Ingledew—Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P., Is Anxious To Have Inspector W. S. Hughes Recalled.

A sensation has been given in the proceedings of the prison reform investigation, in that it is reported that a convict who was called, and who gave very damaging evidence against one of the guards, Frederick Ingledew, has confessed to one of the guards and also to Warden Irvine, that the story he told before the commission regarding Ingledew was not the truth. And further, that he told this story because he thought that Ingledew was trying to oust an official, and that he gave the evidence he did after having an interview with a certain official in the penitentiary.

The matter will have to be cleared up, when the commission resumes its session, and a lively time is expected. From information secured by the Wing, it appears that the convict in question let the cat out of the bag by telling one of the guards that what he had stated before the commission was all lies, and that he had told the lies after being interviewed by a certain official. The guard, after hearing the story, reported to Guard Ingledew, so the story goes, and later, when brought before Warden Irvine, the convict again made a confession.

The evidence of the convict was to the effect that Ingledew was negligent in his duty, when in the "pen" hospital, in that he had convicted orderlies wind up the clock. Ingledew denied all this, and the evidence of the deputy warden and chief night watchman went to show that Ingledew had never been found negligent in his duty.

It was stated definitely, on Wednesday morning, that Major W. S. Hughes, inspector of prisons, would be recalled to give evidence to the commission. He will be subpoenaed, and it is likely will be on hand when the commission gets down to work again at the end of this month, or early in December.

It is understood that when Major Hughes left the city on first being called, Dr. Edwards intimated to him that he would be called again.

It will be remembered that Dr. Edwards stated before the commission that it was largely upon the information given him by Major Hughes, and other in the penitentiary, that the investigation had been brought on, and certain charges made.

Major Hughes, in his evidence, had no direct evidence to offer against any of the prison authorities, but Dr. Edwards is anxious to have him recalled, in order to put some more questions to him, and have the matter cleared up.

Before the Prison Reform Commission is finally adjourned, there will have to be another session in Toronto, when the evidence of some of the ex-guards of the institution, living in Toronto and Hamilton, will be heard.
