Spread the Plague. In the days of King Charles II news traveled slowly in England, and before the people of Cornwall knew about the terrible plague in London chairman has had no intimation what- there came to Bodmin itinerant tradever of any of the guards having con- ers with pack mules laden with silk and satin gowns, rich robes, plumed hats and expensive laces, which were offered for sale at ridiculous prices. The countryside rushed to purchase, and the merchants, having disposed of all their stock, departed. Then within a day or two the purchasers were attacked by a strange sickness and died by scores. The gaudy clothes had been stripped from the bodies of those who had died of the plague in London.

He Made Sure. Mr. Lloyd George has been telling some stories bearing on his own unpopularity with his political opponents. One of them is about a man who was presented with a testimonial for saving someone from drowning. The hero modestly deprecated the praises showered upon him. "Really, I have done very little to deserve this reward," he said, "I saw the man strugging in the water, and, as no one else was by. I knew he would be drowned if I didn't save him. So I jumped in, swam out to him, turned him over to make sure that he wasn't Lloyd George, and then pulled him out."

STALKING THE DUKE.

Penny-a-Liner Followed the "Iron

Man" To His Own Advantage. How a Cabinet secret was revealed in a most amazing fashion by a needy and adventurous penny-a-liner at the end of his resources is related by Mr. J. D. Symon, in "The Press and Its Story." It was during the administration of the Duke of Wellington, at a jucture when the Opposition would have given anything for some hint of the Cabinet's policy. The secret was well-guarded until one evening, just at the rising of the House, a penny-a-liner, who had been hanging about Westminster waiting for something to turn up, saw the duke emerge from the House of Lords accompanied by one of his colleagues. "Now, the duke, in his later years, was very hard of hearing, and cherished that not uncommon illusion of the deaf, that in order to make other people hear he, too, must shout. It occurred to the starveling scribe that

Naturally the editor inquired how so uninfluential a person could have come by such very private information. Being satisfied. however, of the truth of the man's story, he decided to print it, and gave the reporter a handsome check for his enterprise. Next day the appearance of the news, reinforced by a leading article, spread consternation in the Government camp. Who was cler is too variable a feature to be the traitor?

The late Henry Labouchere always vastly enjoyed the title of "Christian member for Northampton," given distinguish him from Mr. Bradlaugh. In a speech at Northampton in support of his colleague he gave the following purely apocryphal account of his leave-taking of Mr. Gladstone

And, men of Northampton, that grand old man said to me, as he patted me on the shoulder, "Henry, my boy, bring him back, bring him back." It is difficult to imagine Mr. Gladstone patting the member for Northampton on the back and calling him, "Henry, my boy." success of this allusion to the Prime Minister, however, was enormous, and the name stuck. Moreover, there are advances as well as retreats in the Alaskan glaciers, and Canada's newly-gained harbor will eventually be lost again through advance of the glacier. This scientists know from the ancient and modern advances of ice tongues in this very region.

Clearly the international boundary thould not be shifted with every such fluctuation of a glacier, nor should coastal boundaries in glaciated mountains be located without knowledge of and regard for such glacial oscil-

If the international boundary had been fixed a century ago. Canada would have made up for its loss of territory near Mount St. Elias by the addition to British Columbia of a part of what is now Alaska, in the region east and north of Russell Fiord. Even this give-and-take as a result of differences in the coast-line, in connection with the advance and recession of glaciers, would have been unfair, for neither the emaciated glacier coast nor the advanced gla--cier coast marks a permanent condition. See what has just happened. Hidden Glacier continued the recession of the nineteenth century during the period of recent observations from 1890 to 1906. But between 1906 and 1909 this ice tongue advanced two miles, probably in 1907.

All of there observations show the unfitness of the temporary terminus of a tidal glacier to be considered the head of a bay, especially in cases where the coast-line bears an important relationship to the determination of an international boundary. The strated this clearly."
