winter Pa - AR EAST" styles from Paris This and the cut of thewaist give it the old have had a steadily increasing fashioned look of the dresses of the sevenvogue for a number of seasons, ties and early eighties. The black velvet But now come some new style bracelet, the manner of dressing the hair lines. There are gently remi- and the tilt of the hat have not a little to niscent of the fashions of the do with the resemblance in silhouette with seventies. Among them are the sleeve- the fashions of those days. The black tulle less evening dresses, the flounced clbow is a scarf, separate from the dress, to take sleeves, the sash bow placed low at the off the too severe look. The roses and back of the dress and the masculine vest maidenhair fern are curiously posed almost that shows between the open front of the in the centre front of the waist. corsage. Also, we see the wired neck There is a band of skunk fur at the ruches of lace of those days, the coats foot of the gown. The hat, which, like buttoned up to the neck, the pannier all the new ones, has a brim that is the drapings and the bustle back puffs. most conspicuous, part of it, has the Not only confined to dress is this re- unique curves that are the mark of ultra vival of old fashioned styles. The latest millinery. hair coiffure is like those of days agone. The other gown, of chestaut brown veland presents almost the same silhouette. vet, has the material draped so that it The tresses are closely waved about the scant about the foot line and falls in full face, the hair brought up to form a puff at the top back of the head. To be sure. the curls that dropped at the back of some of these old time coiffures are yet missing in the smart hairdressing of to-Premet showed this season among his Two-Toned Velvet Hat, the Backgro tailored suits a short coat that had the . Green, the Pile of Green Satint old fashioned curved side seams and cen-Photo Copyright, 1913, by Reutlinger tre back seam; the coat edges basque was Exchains Copyright, 1913, New York Herald Company almost godet about the lower. The old style tiptilted hats are perhaps moments almost revealing the stocking much modernized, but that does not prevent them from being on the same lines Another interesting detail of the afteras some that decorate the primly pretty noon Horse Show was the corsage fashion engravings of the old fashion bouquet of orchids. They were made In those days, too, they wore dolman, spray foshion, sometimes fastened with wraps and short little mantelettes that narrow loops and ends of matching ribbon, are surely grandmothers of those in style and were combined with fine fernery and to-day. Of course, there was not that tightened in look about the ankles in maidenhair. dresses then, but trains were oblong and The vogue of duvetyn and velvet afteroval ended, as now. Velvet bracelets and noon suits was very marked. Most of neck ribbons were the fashion in the sevthem were cut with the tiered skirts and enties. Flower trimmed ball dresses, cut the loose cutaway coat that buttoned dangerously low, with a ruffle serving as tightly up to the neck. A band of fur on the military collar and a band making

> Photo Copyright, 1913, by Reutlinger Exclusive Copyright, 1913,

New York Herald Company

Chestnut Brown Velvet, Edged with Skunk. Brown Velvet Hat and Paradise Plumes.

Photo Copyright, 1913, by Reutlinge Kaciusies Copyright, 1913, New York Hespid Comp

an excuse for a sleeve, were as daring as the simulated décolletes of to-day. lines as they appear. A French actress, nowadays. protest for her gowning, has had her latest These furs are now often dyed the same ble effect of luxury and richness. sendence type as the heroines that were so ing, as, of course, the fur can then be silk, with large flower designs. office painted by the Belgian artist used for no other purpose, since the fash. All the smart dresses this winter are. The Directoire for example, may or black patent or dull leather. Affred Stevens, who caught the love- lonable shades are so bright and are only to be trimmed with fur. It will be minliness of women of that generation, possible by artificial light.

folds at the hips. Though the lines do not bear so close a resemblance to the styles of other days, still there are certain details amusing to note. The little vest front that falls below the waist line. the pannierlike fuiness of the skirt and the elbow sleeves and primly crossed corsage fronts all seem to have been inspired more or less by the engravings of the latter part of the nineteenth century. The gown has no decoration beyond the inevitable touch of fur, placed at the crossed fronts. A net yoke fills the V, another skin is carelessly thrown over and a white satin collar shows only in the shoulder.

Black Velvet Hat Trimmed with Algrette

Photo Copyright, 1913, by F. ...

Raciosive Copyright, 1913, New Yo paradise ornaments. The four hats are typical of this new cess on a cloak of that warm yet soft but fashion of jauntily posed millinery Pompeilau red which is worn so much that gives style to the rather severe coif- just now. fure. Four different ornamentations are Sable is by no means losing its place. used on these hats, three of which are With a wide square collar forming a velvet. One is decorated with cross point on the shoulders, it would have aigrettes, one with paradise plumes, one a splendid effect on a cloak of ivory with feathers and one with long ribbon stamped velvet. The warm whiteness of loops. Shapes, too, differ. The Tam o' the ermine skins is also very attractive. Shanter is artistically tiptilted to one but they are chiefly seen in entire mantles. side, the feather trimmed hat has a Among the originalities may be noted startlingly rolled brim edge, and the paradise plumes are as delicate as the slender brim curves they adorn.

Fur Trimmings Still in Favor.

in feminine favor as the most magnificent and the Parisienne is nothing if not a moleskin would be used on a gray frock women. The launching of a new mode, however, adornment for the handsome garments priestess of fashion, so she has good right and sable might adorn any shade of excluded. Russian and Oriental styles popular, since its softness, light weight distinction to any garment, particularly such as the black and white-of which will be seen, in plenty this winter, worn and fluffy texture make it a fitting adjunct if that garment be made of plain velver, feminine taste seems unable to tire. c ming. Meanwhile, it is the duty of a for the stamped velvet and brocades of The color, being both warm and dull at Each day seems to bring about a more THE vogue of light topped shoes was fashion reporter to announce new fashion wrought gold or silver which are used the same time, lends itself well to any shade as the cloak-a very costly proceed- As to the linings, they are usually the back. The brown veivet hat has The gray fox, which was so popular last winter, will be used with great suc-

the use of a little baby panther skin. thrown over a velvet mantle stamped in a bizarre fashion with the same fawn and brown tones. Parisians appear to like the contrast, which suggests the jungle. shooting and the race for life in the midst now given to harmonious effects instead tinction of carriage; there is undoubt mothers' day has sprung suddenly into the way the long ornamental feathers. N spite of some attempts to introduce of their calm civilization.

combination of shades. Entire coats are made of this fur, giving an incompara- is more or less flottement. It is only Not only were the high shoes light topped, their choice that one can judge of gled with tuile, velvet, satin or broches, increasing, especially for the tailor cost they seem especially suited to her. The black velvet evening gown is striking beblack velvet evening gown is striking becomment is an evquisite sulphur-yellow, evening dresses the warm caress of fur short in front, with the waistcoat and strike for the fitch fur with a greenish tint, held in at the bottom will be at once the most becoming and revers and the collar high at the back.

One closk which has roused much and on afternoon dresses as well as on tumes. The coat, long at the back and light fawn, brown or gray cloth; some of colors as the two tones of the fitch fur was posed at one side. Another coat, of its sleevelessuess and its un- with a greenish tint, held in at the bottom will be at once the most costly triuming. The bresent is obtaining a tremendant success with

Black Velvet Gown, Adorned with Tulle and Bouquet of Roses, Hat

of Black Velvet and Paradise Plumes.

Tete-de-Negre Plush, Trimmed with Ostrich Plume. Photo Copyright, 1913, by Reutlinger Exclosive Copyright, 1913, New York Herald Company

characteristic tendency in the fushion one of the most noticeable fashion

At the beginning of each season there | features of the New York Horse Show. when the Parisian costumers have made but the smartest footwear had light colparticular style and genre which will ored beels also. To all intents and pur poses only the vamp of the shoe was feature about it—the belt is placed as it like heads neet very high me nearly at fashion of the tunic skirt facilitates the the women who like to be the first to afternoon to lored suits were so short chinchilla collar and cuffs. In each case all the conventional tones of the moder worn, below the inward curve of the walst, for the harmoniously draped pleats, while It may be noted that preference is This style demands some personal distinct uppers showed at there was a little flat, oblong must of gowns.

of using fors of striking contrasts. A edly a certain manner in which these style again this winter. Its light creamy paradise or aigreties, are posed. trimmings of ostrich feathers on the For that matter a panther skin used trimming of skunk, for instance, would toilettes must be worn, so they will tone tipped with bronze brown is decoraevening cloaks fur still holds first place to distinguish the vocation of the priest, be chosen for an old gold costume, while probably only be patronized by society tive and harmonizes with almost any New Petti-Skirts of The launching of a new mode, however, adornment for the namesome garment for the namesome garmen color of duvetyn or velvet. Chinchilla, tiger leopard, tigrette, seal, broadtail and ETTICOATS are a trifle wider, but cuffs on the long sleeves was the correct

trimming, and fitch was the preferred fur

for this.

and cuffs also. The small but often has a band of the suit fur adorning it, and a muff of it is a necessary finishing touch. The fashion of long nufitted velvet or duvetyn coats for little girls was very

Black Velvet, Paradise Plumes.

Photo Copyright, 1913, by Reutlinger

Exchairs Copyright; 1913, New York Herald Company

marked. The fur trimming was almost invariably of this old-new fitch fur. One little black velvet coat had a little collar, and cuffs on it. A band of it encircled Skirts for day wear are of creps de the black velvet mob cap, and one large Chine, silk jersey and soft slinky sating adorned to offer the most costly triuming. The present is obtaining a tremendous success with the backs meet very high up nearly at fashion of the tunic skirt facilitates the the women who like to be the fitch triumed. A third little coat had greens and wine shades, and, of course, matching fur. Worn underneath were white batiste, net and linen dresses with the long sashed or belted lines.

This charming fitch for of our grand 'A very little child had a white duvelyn coat on, and the usual belt was dropped almost to the hem of the dress length coat, held on by narrow straps. A little white round Russian bat had a wide band of white fox fur. All of these coats buttoned single breasted right up to the neck. There was not a sign of a lapel.

Some of the prettiest of the evening coats seen at the Horse Show were of unspotted ermine. In the full length coats the tails were replaced by dark fur collars which gave a new look to this beautiful fur. Sable, seal or beaver made sailor, turned over or boa collars that contrasted sharply with the creamy white of the ermine. In the knee length ermine coats the tails were used for border trimming, placed along the edges in oue of two rows at regular intervals, fringing the collar, if of ermine, or worked into the material in whirligig motifs.

Some of the débutautes came without hats in the evening, with festuous of rhinestones in the hair or the pretty. sparkling pins. The younger set kept to brilliantly colored wraps of liberty satin, fur trimmed; a few had capelike mantles of brocades of the latest patterns.

With all the furs in vogue of course some novelties crept in, notably the montflon, which is having, it is said, a good deal of success in Paris. This resembles the Australian lynx at a little distance and seems to have been chosen as a "young" fur. It was noted on one debutante's afternoon suit and on another's evening cloak.

Tiptilted hats were another of the norelties. Like other Paris/innovations, they have already reached this side and are a welcome change from the capping tonnes. that hide most of the hair or else pull it down into the eyes, covering most of the face. These velvet hats, posed at an still two good breadths of silk of the average width will make a stylish one. Just leave the seam on one side open for ten or twelve inches above the betuwhich should measure the same number of inches. Fancy fringe, lare or a tracery of embroidery Anishes the lower edge of the petticoat and outlines the slashes.