To her the dignified old ghost of memories is only a fuddled old drunk. She calls a policeman. The old doctor is taken to court, where Mr. Ellis kindly reminds him to sober up--to come out of the past. But in a short while the aged man goes again to the bosom of his memories on whiskey-light feet.

Old Dr. John is a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and served as a military surgeon and as soldier in several Indian campaigns with the 10th Royal Irish Regiment. In 1871 he came to Toronto and set up practice. He owned four chemist shops, one at the corner of Queen and Sherbourne, one at the corner of Dundas and Poyler streets, and others at places forgotten by him in the advance of days. He had an extended medicine practice, but it grew away from him, and when, eighteen years ago, his wife died, the doctor began to subsist on memories.

"Seen in the cells Dr. John said he knew of no relatives. "I once had property, but it got away from me," he said. "I still have this--top hat and coat--to make my calls in." He was still several years away.
