"Mr. Rose's 'Life of Napoleon,' in short, is statesmanlike in conception, impartial in treatment, accurate in detail, and attractive in style. A DANCE DIFFICULTY STUDENT MOVEMENT

PATRONESSES REFUSE TO LEND THEIR SERVICES

To Queen's Junior Year Function If the Event Was Held in the City Hall — Alma Mater Society Discusses the Matter.

The first representative student gathering this year turned out to the Alma Mater meeting on Saturday evening. The reason for such a large attendance, especially of ladies was due to the agitation of the junior year dance committee to obtain permission to continue their dance until one o'clock, over-riding the present social function regulations which demand a twelve o'clock closing. A communication was received from the Levens society stating that the ladies were strictly opposed to holding the dance outside the college and desired to show their loyalty to the Alma Mater society in refusing to attend the dance unless it was held under the society's regulations. A motion was brought before the meeting that the constitution should be suspended for a week in order to allow the Junior Year the same privilege that the final year enjoyed at its dance. This motion was ruled out of order by the president since sufficient notice had not been given and the constitution required in such cases when an amendment was included.

Another motion was then brought forward that a committee be appointed to confer with the principal and registrar in order to attempt to come to some agreement about the extension of time for the dance, on account of the peculiar circumstances that the present regulations have given rise to. But the motion, together with an amendment to the effect that the society showed itself in favor of an extension of time, was lost on the grounds that since a step would be simply showing the college officials that the student body was unable to cope with the difficulties. The committee was then asked to report and brought in a recommendation that the society show itself in favor of an extension of the time provided the senate agrees. This report was adopted, but a motion to send a copy to the senate was lost. This was all the progress that could be made, if it could be called progress, as the matter in reality was no further ahead than at the start. The question was hotly discussed and many breaches of procedure were committed, some students at time not showing due respect to the chair. The ladies were invited down from the gallery to vote, and for the first time this year, Bourinot had to be consulted.

The dance had been fixed to be held in the city hall. The patronesses originally chosen, wives of university professors, refused to act if the event was held outside of the college. A great many students in all faculties have been laid up with illness this year, more so than in previous years, and the hospital tickets are receiving plenty of use.

Songs for Children

Under the pen name "Chanticleer" is recognized G. F. Joy, formerly of Kingston. "In Fairy Lane" (National Children's Home, London) is a little collection of children's songs, the sale of which will help on the home for consumptive children at Herpenden, Herts. They breathe a love of children of all ages and conditions of life. Mr. Joy has a pretty knack with British vernacular.

His First Sunday

"It was Smith's first Sunday as usher in church, and he was a bit flustered. Turning to a lady who entered, he said: "This way, madame, and I'll sew you into a sheet."

A SERMON BY REV. S. J. M. COMPTON.

In Behalf of the Great Student Mission Work — "Spiritual Leadership and Its Price."

Who will join in this intercession for the Student Christian Movement? Surely, those who understand and sympathize with the movement, therefore we as a people would try to understand what this movement stands for.

The above, in effect, were Rev. S. J. M. Compton's words in St. Andrew's church on Sunday morning. The preacher chose for his text Matthew ix, 29: "Believe ye that I am able to do this." And, "According to your faith be it unto you," and he used his text to illustrate the efficacy of prayer in connection with the day of prayer for students.

Founded twenty years ago by a small group of students in Princeton University, the World's Christian Federation comprises to-day some 2,400 colleges and universities who are interested in it, and who have members who are trying to encourage young men to enter the Christian missionary cause. Their conferences are good as a means of interchange of thought at first hand from the representatives of different countries. They are good as a power for peace, as all nationalities fraternize at these conferences. The movement stands for the capture of all the universities of the world for the Christian faith. Its leaders are the very finest type of men in the student world to-day. It stands for belief in the power of prayer, in which atmosphere it lives and moves and had its origin.

Since its inception in the year 1893, in Princeton University, over 5,000 students have gone to foreign fields as missionaries of the Christian church. For this reason and because of the great confidence the federation has in prayer, this day is specially set apart as a day of prayer, and according to the faith of the supplicant, the prayer shall be answered.

In the evening Mr. Compton dwelt on "Spiritual Leadership and Its Price"—more especially the price of leadership—a leader must be consecrated to Christ, and must know the way, and must pay the price of knowing, through the anguish and perplexity of finding out the clear will of God. How is this done? By prayerful, thoughtful study. The leader must be prepared to meet the "backwash" of unresponsive men, and perhaps failure afterwards, but heroic perseverance will ultimately win. Leadership means drinking of the cup of which Christ drank. It means sometimes utter loneliness ahead, and alone! Leadership appears a unenviable life, but true honorable men will not flinch, but will work onward and upward and win men to Christ.

The splendid musical service of this church is always an inspiring feature, but special mention might be made of the evening anthem, "Bide With Me" when the soft passages were sung by the choir as one voice, breathing an evening prayer.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Alexander Loftus Writes About Canadian Theatrical Field

Kingston, Feb. 21.—(To the Editor)—I had the pleasure of playing in Kingston last September, twelve months, with "The New Barmaid," the celebrated English musical comedy which brought direct from London, in its entirety, with a full chorus, and it was with reluctance to the latter and the trouble managers have in bringing girls so far away from their homes that was possibly the reason why managers had always secured their girls in New York, that I was interviewed by you.

At the termination of the Canadian tour lasting two months, I shipped the entire company (with four exceptions) back to England from Montreal, the four remaining to go to New York, where I went myself. I have travelled through most of the theatres now in Canada, this being my second visit and I am convinced there is a big field open for theatrical enterprise in Canada, which English managers are only just begging to know, and in a few years when the towns have grown and the journeys can be arranged easier and more economical, no doubt more English plays will find their way over here.

The theatres in Canada are surprisingly good and leave little to be desired. I have now been with "The Butterfly on the Wheel" company since last August, playing the English diplomat "Lord Ellerdine," but I miss singing the "Little Bit of Sugar for the Bird," the topical song of "The New Barmaid." At the termination of this tour I hope to go to the old country with a view to getting another play to travel Canada when I hope to again pay you another visit.—Yours faithfully, ALEXANDER LOFTUS.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE

"A Butterfly on the Wheel." Produced on Saturday.

Two presentations, matinee and night, of the English divorce play, "A Butterfly on the Wheel," were well received at the Grand on Saturday. The story, which allows due scope for a glimpse at the characters, amusements and scheming of the wealthy English principals, reaches the climax in the divorce court scene, in the third act, where the Butterfly wife of the Hon. Geo. Admaston, M.P., is being cross-examined by "Sir Robert Pyke," the scrutinizing prosecutor for her husband. Charlotte Lillard as "Peggy Admaston," the Butterfly, an actress of capability, was seen at her best in the witness box. The story of the journey to Paris of "Peggy" and Roderick Collingwood, (E. J. Rolow), under the eye of her husband's agents, the subsequent divorce suit, and clearing up of the whole plot, is fascinating. The principals in the cast are artists of attainment.

QUEER THINGS IN REAL LIFE

Sometimes Truth Still is Stranger Than Fiction

Death and the divorce court, those two great dividers, were recently responsible for an encounter in actual life, stranger than many that have taken place on the stage or in a novel, says the Manchester Guardian. A gentleman, who may be called Mr. L., lost his first wife many years ago and was left with one little girl. By-and-by he married again, but after some years his second wife instituted divorce proceedings against him and a decree was granted. Mrs. L., who had become attached to her step-child, took charge of her. Mr. L. went abroad, where he got married a third time, and again a little girl was born to him.

The child grew up, and her parents and she paid a visit this year to Mr. L.'s native land. During a walking tour it occurred to him that he was about to pass through the town where his second wife and first-born child were living, and he wrote to the former, said by whom he was accompanied, and begged permission to call. This was readily and even graciously granted, and he was received, with Mrs. and Miss L., on the footing of an old friend. A pleasant afternoon, of all appearances, must have been experienced in a party which included the daughter of a first wife, a second wife, a third wife, her child, the father of both daughters, and the husband of both wives.
