"If I thought," answered Armstrong quickly, "I should go mad. Newbold, your wife was as pure as the snow; that she loved me I cannot and will not deny, she married you in a fit of jealousy and anger after a quarrel between us in which I was to blame, and when I came back to the camp in your absence, I strove to make it up and used every argument that I possessed to get her to leave you and to live with me. Although she had no love for you she was too good and too true a woman for that. Now you've got the truth, damn you, believe it or not as you like. Miss Maitland," he added swiftly. "If I had met you sooner, I might have been a better man. Good bye."

He turned suddenly and none preventing, indeed it was not possible, he ran to the outer door; as he did so his hand snatched something that lay on the chest of drawers. There was a flash of light as he drew in his arm but none saw what it was. In a few seconds he was outside the door. The table was between old Kirkby and the exit; Maitland and Newbold were nearest. The old man came to his senses first.

"After him," he cried, "he means—"

But before anybody could stir the dull report of a pistol come through the open door!

They found Armstrong lying on his back in the snowy path, his face as white as the drift that pillowed his head, Newbold's heavy revolver still clutched in his right hand and a bloody welling smudge on his left breast over his heart. It was the woman who broke the silence.

"Oh," she sobbed, "it can't be—"

"Dead," said Maitland solemnly.

"And it might have been by my hand," muttered Newbold to himself in horror.

"He'll never cause no more trouble to nobody in this world, Miss Enid an' gents," said old Kirkby gravely. "Well, he was a damned fool an' a damned villain in some ways," continued the old frontiersman reflectively in the silence broken otherwise only by the woman's sobbing breaths, "but he had some of the qualities that go to make a man, an' I ain't doubtin' but what them last words of hisn was mighty near true. Ef he had met a girl like you earlier in his life, he mought have been a different man."

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Draught of Joy.

The great library was the prettiest room in Robert Maitland's magnificent mansion in Denver's most favored residence section. It was a long, low-studded room with a heavy beamed ceiling. The low book cases, about five feet high, ran between all the windows and doors on all sides of the room. At one end there was a huge open fire place built of rough stone, and as it was winter a cheerful fire of logs blazed on the hearth. It was a man's room pre-eminently. The drawing-room across the hall was Mrs. Maitland's domain, but the library reflected her husband's picturesque if somewhat erratic taste. On the walls there were pictures of the west by Remington, Marchand, Dunton, Dixon and others, and to set them off, finely mounted heads of bear and deer and buffalo. Swords and other arms stood here and there. The writing table was massive and the chairs easy, comfortable and inviting. The floor was strewn with robes and rugs. From the windows facing westward, since the house was set on a high hill, one could see the great rampart of the range.

There were three men in the room on that brilliant morning early in January something like a month after these adventures in the mountains which have been so veraciously set forth. Two of them were the brothers Maitland; the third was Newbold.

The shock produced upon Enid Maitland by the death of Armstrong together with the tremendous episodes that had preceded it had utterly prostrated her. They had spent the night at the hut in the mountains and had decided that the woman must be taken back to the settlements some way at all hazards.

The wit of old Kirkby had effected a solution of the problem, using a means certainly as old as Napoleon and the passage of his cannon over the Great St. Bernard—and perhaps as old as Hannibal! They had made a rude sled from the trunk of a pine which they hollowed out and provided with a back and runners. There was no lack of fur robes and blankets for her comfort.

Wherever it was practicable the three men hitched themselves to the sled with ropes and dragged it and Enid over the snow. Of course for miles down the canon it was impossible to use the sled. When the way was comparatively easy the woman, supported by the two men, Newbold and Maitland, made shift to get along afoot. When it became too difficult for her, Newbold picked her up as he had done before and assisted by Maitland, carried her bodily to the next resting place. At these times Kirkby looked after the sled.

They had managed to reach the temporary hut in the old camp the first night and rested there. They gathered up their sleeping bags and tents and resumed their journey in the morning. They were strong men, and save for old Kirkby, young. It was a desperate endeavor but they carried it through.

When they hit the open trails the sledding was easy and they made great progress. After a week of terrific going, they struck the railroad, and the next day found them all safe in Maitland's house in Denver.

To Mr. Stephen Maitland his daughter was as one who had risen from the dead. And indeed, when he first saw her, she looked like death itself. No one had known how terrible that journey had been to the woman. Her three faithful attendants had surmised something, but in spite of all even they did not realize that in these last days she had been sustained only by the most violent effort of her will. She had no sooner reached the house, greeted her father, her aunt and the children, then she collapsed utterly.

The wonder was, said the physician, not that she did it then but that she had not done it before. For a short time it appeared as if her illness might be serious, but youth, vigor, a strong body and a good constitution, a heart now free from care and apprehension and a great desire to live and love and be loved, worked wonders.

Newbold had enjoyed no opportunity for private conversation with the woman he loved, which was perhaps just as well. He had the task of readjusting himself to changed conditions; not only to a different environment, but to strange and unusual departures from his long cherished view points.

He could no longer doubt Armstrong's final testimony to the purity of his wife, although he had burned the letters unread, and by the same token he could no longer cherish the dream that she had loved him and him alone. Those words that had preceded that pistol shot had made it possible for him to take Enid Maitland as his wife without doing violence to his sense of honor or his self-respect. Armstrong had made that much reparation. And Newbold could not doubt that the other had known what would be the result of his speech and had chosen his words deliberately; score that last action to his credit. He was a sensitive man, however; he realized the brutal and beast-like part he and Armstrong had both played before this woman they both loved, how they had battled like savage animals and how but for a lucky interposition he would have added murder to his other disabilities.

He was honest enough to say to himself that he would have done the same thing over under the same circumstances, but that did not absolve his conscience. He did not know how the woman looked at the transaction or looked at him, and he had not enjoyed one moment alone with her. In all that had transpired since that morning in the hut, the four had naturally and inevitably remained inseparably together.

They had buried Armstrong in the snow, Robert Maitland saying over him a brief but fervent petition in which even Newbold joined. Enid Maitland herself had repeated eloquently to her uncle and old Kirkby that night before the fire the story of her rescue from the flood by this man, how he had carried her in the storm to the hut and how he had treated her since; and Maitland had afterwards repeated her account to his brother in Denver.

ROYAL COUPLE SUMMONED

Divorce Suit Will be Tried in Their Usual Way.

Stockholm, Sweden, March 17.—The Grand Duchess Pavlovna of Russia, the wife of Prince William of Sweden, second son of King Gustave V, was summoned, yesterday, through the Swedish legation in St. Petersburg to appear in the court of assizes at Stockholm. She will there have to answer a charge of having deserted her husband. Divorce proceedings between the royal couple have been in progress for some time.

Prince William, who is now shooting in Uganda, is not expected to return to Sweden before the end of April.

The grand duchess has been in St. Petersburg for some time. She is a daughter of the Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovitch and a cousin of the Emperor of Russia. She is now in her twenty-fourth year. Her husband is in his thirtieth year and the marriage took place in 1908. They have one son, Prince Lennart, born in 1909.

Witnesses are to be heard by the court of assizes, and the suit will be tried in the usual way. It was at one time thought possible to arrange a divorce without the formalities, but the Swedish law makes no exception in the case of royalty. The date of the hearing has not yet been fixed.

WANT TO JAIL FELIX DIAZ

Ask Seventeen-Year Sentence for Havana Fracas

Havana, March 17.—A sentence of seventeen years is demanded for Gen. Felix Diaz, and one of four years and two months for his friend, Cecilio Ocon, in the brief of the private prosecutor in the case growing out of the attack upon Gen. Diaz on Havana's fashionable promenade, the Malecon, last year.

The case will soon come up for trial and the private prosecutor will attempt to get a higher court to reverse the lower court's action in freeing Diaz and Ocon from custody. If it does, a demand for the extradition of Diaz and Ocon will be made.

The brief asserts that Diaz fired a shot, wounding Pedro Guerrero.

DRIVEN OUT OF CHURCH

Priest Had Policeman in Edifice, Fearing Trouble.

Berlin, March 17.—The police were compelled to clear St. Paul's Catholic church on Sunday of the members of the congregation at the morning service. There have been long-standing differences between the German and Polish members of the parish and a Pole arose in the midst of the sermon and began an argument with the priest. The pastor, anticipating trouble, had appealed to the police for protection, and a detachment of them was scattered among the congregation when the service began. When the disturbance arose the officiating priest gave a signal to the police, who ordered every one to leave the church. The order was obeyed with but slight resistance.

CURING WOMEN SMOKERS

Chicago League Claims Successful Fight Against Cigarette

Chicago, March 17.—A clinic for women smokers was established by the Anti-Cigarette League, which has been successful in breaking the cigarette habit in boys who have appeared in the juvenile court. The treatment is simply spraying the throat with a solution of nitrate of silver.

"Fifteen women have already been treated by us," asserted Lucy Page Gaston, president of the league. "In every instance the desired aversion for cigarettes was the result.

"We are opening the clinic because we believe there are thousands of girls and women in Chicago who would rid themselves of the vice if they had the opportunity."

HONORED BY BRITAIN

Appointed Honorary Member of Royal Astronomical Society

Boston, Mass., March 17.—The selection of Miss Annie J. Cannon, curator of photographs at the Harvard University observatory, as an honorary member of the English Royal Astronomical Society, has brought to Harvard another signal honor for one of its few women servants.

Miss Cannon succeeded the late Wilhemina Patton Fleming, nearly three years ago, and since then her work in preparing a catalogue of star spectra, declared by astronomers to be the most complete ever made, has made her famous throughout the astronmical world.

COLORED WIG CRAZE

White Dresses to Offset the Colored Headdresses

St. Petersburg, March 17.—The colored wig craze has attacked Russian society. The Countess Schuvaloff gave a ball, the guests at which were all of the most exclusive and most exalted circles of St. Petersburg court society. The Countess Schuvaloff wore a green wig on which she had a wreath of pearls. The dresses worn were largely white, so as to offset the blue, scarlet, purple, lilac and salmon wigs, which were the most favored shades. Others were brilliant orange with diamonds, bright green with emeralds and also silver and gold.

Model Rural Community.

Edmonton, Alta., March 17.—British capitalists, represented by Albin Hunt and Hal Carleton, of London, have just acquired 14,000 acres of land adjoining the town of Kinsella, seventy-five miles east of Edmonton, where a model rural community and demonstration farm is to be established. The plan is to teach settlers from Great Britain how to grow live stock, grain, grasses and produce at a profit. The tract will be operated upon a co-operative basis, the projectors supplying the land, houses, machinery and seeds and facilities for marketing.

Thomas E. Owens, Picton, Ont., who retired this week as a director of the Dominion Canners is one of the pioneers in the canning idustry of Canada. Mr. Owens was perhaps the first man to sell canned goods into the great Canadian North West. He built up the Bloomfield Packing company.
