HOW NERVOUS MEN GET
MOST OUT OF LIFE
(From "Successful Men.") Every normal minded man wishes to get all he can out of life—but many men know that he is falling far short.
The successful man works, eats and plays with the keenest enjoyment, because his nerves are keenly sensitive. His tastes, habits and feelings all vibrate with the highest emotions, consequence he has stamina, endurance and personal magnetism, which makes those near and dear to him, worship his manliness, chivalry and strenuousness.

Without keen, sensitive, well nourished nerves, such a man would be an object of pity, and not the brilliant successful man of the world.
All men should have well-nourished nerves, but if the blood and vital energy do not supply the chemical or substance known as nerve fluid, then the waste of the nerves is not renewed daily and hourly as it should be. The nerves become exhausted, giving rise to such symptoms as trembling hands and limbs, cold feet and hands, melancholia, hysteria, timidity, nervousness, sleeplessness, dizziness, heart palpitation, pains in the back, headache, languor and weariness at all times. A most valuable nerve treatment, restorative in every sense, is to be found in the following prescription, emanating, it is said, from a brilliant and successful specialist on nervous ailments.

The treatment can be prepared in the privacy of home and thus causes no one any embarassment. First get three ounces of syrup of sarsaparilla compound in a six ounce bottle.
To this add one ounce of compound fluid of binnow's. Shake well and let stand two hours.
Then add one ounce of tincture of cod-liver oil compound (not cod-liver oil) and one ounce of compound essence of cod-liver oil.
Shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring.

It is astonishing to feel the new nerve force, the steered nerves, and the control of every muscle in the body after using this. Overworked office men, and the many victims of society's late hours and disipatory life, find in this restorative, rejuvenating force they sorely in need of. The ingredients are used in various prescriptions and any good chemist can supply them.

Colonial Press Service, Limited.

"She showed no more respect for his wishes in him than she did in another thing on which he had set his heart," said Elsa. "She read me some of his letter. It was an earnest appeal to her to keep me in ignorance of his guilt. Her answer to that appeal was a sneer and a jibe. She took away every shred of my ignorance, cared nothing that he had loved me, and laughed at me for having had the folly to believe in him. I think my mother is a wicked woman, Horace. In one part of my father's letter to her he said that she had driven him into crime. She read that to me, too, as though it were true and as though she did not care whether I knew it or not. Certainly she did not deny it. I must believe that it was true. But there was one part that she did not read. It was the part in which he told her where the diamonds were. I think she did not read that because she knew that I would prevent her from getting them, if I could."

"One moment," said Scarborough quickly. "How do you know that the part which she did not read contained that information? Did she tell you so?"

"No."

"Then how do you know?"

"I don't know. But she blamed me for having left the stone jar where she found it, and I might make up my mind to be pauper, and that it would be my fault. She said so more than once. The last time was when we found that someone had been watching about this man, and they sailed away from the Ritz without thinking of him again. However, when they were about half a mile away from it, they saw him climb down its outer flanks and get into his boat. He had evidently waited till they were inside, and had then returned, landed on the outside, and climbed up to a point from which he could see from it. The day was calm, and the movement of water against the flanks of the rock was less than usual; but even so there was a constant noise of breaking water. It was hardly likely that he could hear as well as we."

"Do you know who he was?" asked Scarborough.

"No. I thought that most probably he was a chance visitor, who was impelled by no motive more unexplainable than a simple curiosity to know what we were going to do there."

Scarborough shook his head, saying:

"Did Mrs. Carrington think so?"

"No," said Elsa. "Mother seemed to be afraid of him. I don't know why."

"I think I can see why," said Scarborough. "She had a document in her possession which was valuable, and she was nervous about losing it. Also it looks as though she had some reason to think that there was someone in the island who knew enough to be dangerous. Had she read that letter which you showed me just now?"

"Yes," said Elsa.

"Then she probably interpreted it as I do. There is someone who knows about the diamonds, and has already made attempts to get hold of them."

"Do you mean the hooded woman?"
Elsa asked.

"Perhaps the hooded woman will turn out to be the person I mean," said Scarborough. "I don't know. But I am sure that there was someone who was threatening your father. In his letter to you he speaks of himself as going to meet a known danger for your sake—I shall be engaged in a contest with an enemy who is well known to me; an enemy who of late has taken to using threats." Those are his words.
"What do you suppose they mean?"

"I took them to refer to his physical weakness—the aneurism which killed him," said Elsa.

"I don't think so," the young man replied. "He speaks of that afterwards, in a different connection. I don't think the two things are the same. Besides, he hints that he is being shadowed."

"By somebody in the circus company—Margaret Ryan," said Elsa.

"The circus company had only just arrived, and there is no reason to suppose that he knew anything of its members. The 'danger-circus' cablegram came only the day before, and gave only a vague warning. I think that it is obvious that there had already been some attempt to take the diamonds from him, and the expedition he speaks of was rendered necessary by that attempt. The thing which we have as yet no clue to is the object of that expedition."

"Surely to hide the diamonds," said Elsa.

"He might have done that near home, without endangering his life by making a tremendous physical effort.
It seems to me that he went to meet someone. For what reason, we don't know, but it may have been to arrange a compromise, or even to set blackmail for immunity in the future.
The key to the riddle may, as you suggest, be the identity of the hooded woman."

Elsa said nothing for a moment.
Then she looked gravely at the young man, and said:

"I believe the hooded woman was Margaret Ryan."

Scarborough turned to her with a stare of genuine surprise. So this was why she said the hooded woman had still to prove that her hands were clean of blood!

"You believe that?" he asked.

"Yes," said Elsa.

"I think I can prove to you that you are wrong," said Scarborough, quietly.
"I know that the place where she met your father—met him accidentally, I believe—was ten miles from the place where she was suspected would be the best means of killing the suspicion." Val B. Montague had taken a house in Ponta Delgada for the use of his troupe until the Sea-Horse should be ready for them again. Scarborough and Elsa went there, and asked for Montague's Mar.

She received them graciously, and though Elsa responded to her advances coldly, she refused to see that she was snubbed. Scarborough told her shortly what had happened, explaining that they were now working for her, and again put his question about her business on that night.

"I have given up all thought of recovering what was stolen from me," he told him. "Even if you could offer me those diamonds to-day, I am not sure that I would take them."

Elsa smiled faintly, and Scarborough said:

"Then you still refuse to help us?"

"No. If it will help you to know what my business was, I will tell you.
I would have told you at first, if I hadn't thought that you suspected me of complicity in Mr. Carrington's death. My business was with a man who had written to me that he could recover my property for me, and would do so if I agreed to the terms which he would propose. He asked for an interview."

"You gave it him?" cried Elsa.

"Yes."

"And afterwards?"

"Afterwards I went for a bicycle ride, and met your father."

CHAPTER XVII.
The Senhor Manoel Bernardo.

Elsa turned to Scarborough. "You were right," she said. "The enemy whom my father feared was not one of the circus troupe, if"—she turned swiftly to the other girl, and added—"if Miss Ryan is speaking the truth."

Mona flushed angrily, and then broke into a little laugh.

"Mona de Mar, Equestrienne of the haute école in Val B. Montague's American Touring Circus Combination, can only refer you to her employer for her character," said Elsa, with a mocking little curtsy. "Miss Ryan has merged her identity in that of Mademoiselle Mona. Shall I ring for Val B. Montague to come and give me a testimonial of veracity?"

"I think we shall get on faster if we take it for granted," said Scarborough, quietly. "Why, he wondered, did Elsa go out of her way to say such things?"

"No doubt," said Mona. "Still—" She went to the bell rope, and put her hand on it, turning to Elsa with a smile of questioning.

"I beg your pardon, said Elsa. "I think you are speaking the truth." Mona waited a moment, with the smile, half mocking, half angry, playing around her lips. Then, with a sudden movement she let the rope drop, went to Elsa and took her hands.
"Why, yes," she said, "be friends," she asked, gravely. "I like you, and I think I can make you like me, if you will let me. I want to be your friend.
Won't you let me?"

Elsa drew her hand away; but Scarborough, watching the pair, thought that Mona's impulsive action had in a few seconds done more to make Elsa believe in her than argument would have done in an hour.

"I don't think friendship is possible between us," she said; but she said it as though she were sorry.

"Why not?" said Mona. "There is only one thing that can make it impossible. It is impossible if you still believe that I had anything to do with your father's death. But I don't think that you can really believe that."

"I told Mr. Scarborough this morning that I still believed it," said Elsa reluctantly.

Mona drew back.

"You are honest," she said, and there was resentment in her tone.

"BEAVER FLOUR" is the unfailing friend of the housewife. It saves her the trouble of keeping two kinds of flour—one for bread and another for pastry. Being a perfect blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat, it gives to bread the rich, nutritious properties of the former and the lighter qualities of the latter, making a large white loaf of delicate texture and exquisite flavor.

Toronto, April 3.—On Easter Monday, April 13th, the second annual meeting of the Liberal Club Federation of Ontario will be held in Toronto. In addition to a business session, which will be held in the afternoon, there will be a dinner in the evening, at which the speakers will be N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., and one of the leading members of the domination house.

The extension of the federation throughout the province and the development of the speaker's bureau and the information bureau, which were established recently, will be discussed.
The number of clubs belonging to the federation is increasing rapidly. Last year twenty-five clubs participated, but this year the number is fifty, and with delegates from all the clubs in attendance an interesting session is looked forward to by the members.

Albert Freeman Gets Permission to Leave United States

New York, April 3.—Albert Freeman, who is at liberty under $150,000 bail, pending the outcome of his appeal from a five-year prison sentence for using the mails to defraud investors in mining stocks, obtained from the federal court permission to leave the country provided he could get the consent of his bondsmen. His attorneys explained that Freeman wished to go to Canada in connection with certain mining property.

The action of the court is unusual, inasmuch as Freeman's offense is not extraditable. He was convicted with Julian Hawthorne and Dr. William J.
Morton, recently released from the Atlanta penitentiary.

GORDON BENNETT RALLIES

Though His Condition Causes Considerable Anxiety

London, April 3.—A Central News despatch from Cairo received here says the condition of James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald, causes considerable anxiety.
Prof. Albert Robin, of Paris, a member of the Academy of Medicine, has been summoned to Cairo, where he is expected to arrive to-day.

The despatch says the patient is unable to take nourishment.

Late advices from Cairo reported Mr. Bennett had rallied, and that those who had been watching at his bedside were able to leave him for a time.
