EXCLUSION OF ULSTER FROM IRISH PARLIAMENT

Asquith's Speech in His Constituency Looked on as Not Provocative - No Chance in Sight of This Being Opposed.

London, April 6 .- The final hours of the debate on the second reading of the home rule bill this evening in the commons were marked by further suggestions of conciliation and prospects of a settlement by con sent. It is expected a vote will be reached before midnight.

The speech of John Redmond leader of the nationalists, was unexpectedly conciliatory. "There is no length to which the nationalists will not go to remove the prejudices of Ulster," he declared.

However, while expressing sympathy for the federal scheme of government suggested by Sir Edward Grey, Mr. Redmond said the nationalists would not tolerate the permanent exclusion of Ulster from the Irish parliament.

Speech Not Provocative

London, April 6 .- "I do not regard the premier's speech as in the least provocative, but I can make no further statement until the meeting of the East Fife unionist association on Monday." From the foregoing view expressed yesterday by Colonel Sprot who was to oppose the premier in the forthcoming by-election it may now be safely inferred that Mr. Asquith will have a walk-over, since "Jim" Larkin announces that he will not contest the seat. The premier is due back in London this morning, and, if unopposed, he will not return to the constituency for nomination on Wednesday.

The Cupar correspondent of the Telegraph states on authority that the unionist executive will decide not to oppose the premier. Nobody within the constituency takes exception to Mr. Asquith's speech, except extreme radicals.

Talk of Settlement

So far as can be seen on the surface, the political situation is unchanged. There is much hazy optimism without any apparent basis. Saturday's unionist demonstration in Hyde Park did not equal that given, in honor of the nine labor leaders deported from South Africa, four weeks ago. It was almost wholly a middle class idemonstration, the workingmen being conspicuous by their absence. The speeches were as uncompromising as expected.
