ST. PATRICK ARGUMENT viewed in the Presbyterian by

The Kingston correspondent of The Presbyterian, (Toronta), wrote as follows regarding the recent argument of two Kingson clergymen about St. Patrick:

Sunday, 15th March, created ripple on the surface of the placid waters. Sermons were preached in a number of churches in memory of St. Patrick, and honor done to his name. All expolled his christian worth and works. To St. Andrew he was, no doubt, the good Presby terian Scot, Mr. (James) Succat of old Dumbarton. To St. Paul's, he was the full-fledged Anglican Pat rick. To St. Mary's equally full fledged Catholic. When the forty days are past it may break out again for there appears to be little give and take between the parties. One of Birmingham's stories may be an irenicon: Two Irish ladies belonging to the same parish were given to quarreling, and when they fell out they used terribly bad language. After confession and absolution one of them was leaving the church as the other was going in. On the very stens of the sacred edifice a quarrel began. We have the results and the blessing it we don't spoil them by rivalries and antagonisms which find little countenance from the Cross. Better follow this sentiment, from the Irish Bible, which St. Patrick would certainly approve: "Feuch caidhe an mhaith agus an taotbhneas sin dearbhraithre do combnuidhe a paonthoil!" St. Paul's and St. Mary's, well acquainted with the words, cannot but acquiesce,

St. Patrick founded the usefulness of the measure so far as the workmen are concerned. Representatives of the association had a long if consultation with the cabinet several days ago, the object of which, it is believed, was to press for three alterations in the bill the first proposal was to cut down the maximum amount of the compensation to the workers so that it shall I not in any case, exceed fifty-five per cent. of $1,200.
