On Watch

Those who have no money to put n banks or to invest in stocks that turn out to be no good, sleep soundly in these days of financial worry. The Madoc failure recalls the collapse of a bank in Kingston twenty years ago, when some widows suffered heavily. the four New York gunmen by electricity. On reading about it, the Lampman thought how much quicker a military execution would be. Ten seconds would have sufficed with iring squad.

Up in Hamilton the authorities would not allow the Mormons to hold street corner services, but down here in Kingston, the Lampman says that no authority is needed for street preaching. Anybody who wants to preach on the highways does so, whether they block the sidewalks or not. Kingston has a goodly number of religious, but still probably not more than half the inhabitants go to church, so perhaps the Mormon doctrine would appeal to some, and perhaps even to members of Christian

A townsman writes to the Lamp man and asks if the police court is not open to the public at ten o'clock every morning except Sunday. Not nece sarily, he replies. The police magistrate can hold his court at any hour he wishes, and sometimes he holds special afternoon sittings when there are urgent cases. As far as the Lampman understands, the general public need not be admitted to the court room . He also understands that so long as press representatives are admitted, the court in that way
