DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th, 1913. "I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using 'Fruit-a-lives', I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain in the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took 'Fruit-a-lives' steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking 'Fruit-a-lives' and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

MILLIE'S STRATEGEM

"Millie, I have requested Mr. Mitchell not to come here any more." "What do you mean, Aunt Hetty?" demanded Millie, her blue eyes flashing and her voice quivering with anger. "Why should you tell Jack not to call upon me again? I am not a child and can see no reason why you should object to his visits if I don't."

"You forget yourself, Millie," returned Mrs. Thompson in the same soft, purring tone. "I am your aunt, your father's sister, and he requested in his will that you should make your home with me until you are either married or have reached the age of twenty-five. That makes me your guardian, morally, if not legally, and I deem it my duty to break up your intimacy with Mr. Mitchell."

"What is your reason?" demanded the girl sharply. "I decline to tell you," replied Mrs. Thompson. Her voice was still soft and low, but her thin fingers twitched nervously as if she were imbued with a strong desire to scratch the girl so boldly confronting her. "Mr. Mitchell shall not come here again. That is all I have to say. Of course, as you are of age, I cannot prevent you from meeting him clandestinely, but so far as my home is concerned I shall endeavor to do my duty."

"I think I understand it all now, Aunt Hetty," Millie said slowly and scornfully. "You have deliberately planned this thing knowing that my father, who hated the very mention of runaway marriages, provided that I must be married at your home if I am married before I am twenty-five. If I am married anywhere else one-half of my fortune will go to you."

"Believe what you please," retorted Mrs. Thompson, purring no longer, but speaking harshly and discordantly. "Mr. Mitchell shall not come here again. You may do as you please."

"I am going to marry Jack Mitchell," replied Millie quietly, "and I shall be married in your home. That is all I have to say."

Bolting her door to guard against any intrusion, Millie reflected over the situation. She was now twenty, and by waiting five years until she came into possession of her fortune it would be possible to prevent Mrs. Thompson from obtaining any of the property, but the girl's mind revolved at the idea of waiting so long.

There seemed no way to solve the problem, and Millie arose to take a walk, thinking the fresh air might bring some relief to her troubled mind. As she stood before the mirror arranging her hat she noticed the reflection of men moving about the adjoining house, and she turned to investigate. Men were taking the carpet and moving the furniture out of the room opposite hers, while others were on the floor below, similarly engaged. Could it be possible that the Jacksons were going to move? If they were the adjoining house would probably be for rent, and Millie raised her window quickly and reached out her hand. It almost touched the window of the adjoining house. The houses were joined together front, but in the rear a small space less than three feet wide separated them to admit light and air. A solution of the problem flashed across the girl's mind as she lowered and fastened the window.

During the next week Millie spent much of the time at home. Aunt Hetty, always on the alert, viewed this unusual proceeding with suspicion and remained indoors herself to guard against any possible invasion by Jack Mitchell. Millie smiled complacently, but said nothing, as she noted her aunt's actions. Things were progressing finely, and at last the plan was ready for execution.

Locking and bolting the door, she spent two hours in putting on her prettiest gown. When this task was completed to her satisfaction she raised the curtain and opened the window.

A moment later Jack Mitchell's handsome face peered out of the window of the adjoining house.

"All ready, Millie?" he asked. "Here's the Rev. Mr. Walker, an old friend of mine, and two witnesses, Bert Latimer and Frank Long. We are all ready if you are."

Millie nodded, and the minister directed them to join hands across the space of separation. The marriage service was read in slow measured tones, and they were pronounced man and wife.

Mrs. Thompson, listening, as was her wont, at the keyhole, had heard the sound of voices and felt that something was wrong. Vigorously and viciously she had pounded on the door of Millie's room, demanding admittance during the ceremony, but the Rev. Mr. Walker, previously apprised of the situation, had not heeded the interruption. As Millie unfastened the door Mrs. Thompson's angry face confronted her.

"Who is in your room, Millie?" demanded the aunt, glancing around in quest of the intruder. She found no one in the room, but caught sight of Jack's face across the way. The bridegroom had waited to see what developed when the door was unfastened.

"What is that man doing in the Jackson house?" continued Mrs. Thompson angrily. "I shall request Mrs. Jackson to forbid him coming there."

"Mrs. Jackson has moved, Aunt Hetty," said Millie calmly. "But you have been so busy watching me that you failed to notice it. I, or rather, we have taken the house."

"We? What do you mean?" inquired Mrs. Thompson excitedly. "I have nothing to do with that house."

"I mean Jack and myself, aunt. We have just been married. I stood in my room, and Jack stood in the room of the house next door. I was married in your home and have complied with the condition of my father's will. Good-by, Aunt Hetty."

IRISH CATHOLICS UNGRATEFUL

La Verite Says Their Prejudices Not Being Dissipated.

Quebec, April 24.—A bitter attack on the Irish Catholics of Canada is made by La Verite of Quebec in connection with the recent events at Ottawa college. Speaking of the "disgraceful demonstrations" of the Irish students, it says that it is really painful to think that these "young fanatics" will one day be the ruling class among the Irish Catholics of Canada. The prejudices against the French Catholics are not being dissipated, it contends, and in order to remedy this condition of affairs it suggests that the Irish students should take a course of lessons in the respective histories of Ireland and Canada. "They will then learn," it says, "what Protestant England has done against Catholic Ireland to humiliate her, to ruin her, to persecute her with kicks and sword thrusts. On the other hand, a short course in the history of Canada will make these young Irishmen reflect on the generous treatment accorded by the French-Canadians to the poor typhus-stricken exiles of Ireland who landed on the shores of our county and were received like brothers."

"The times are much changed. Certain sons forget too soon the debts of gratitude contracted by their fathers. Do not see now, a few days the Irish descendants of those unfortunates who were persecuted by English Orangemen running to the Canadian Orangemen to make war on the French language, the tongue of their benefactors and their saviours?"

"And even memory, so often treacherous in old age, may be preserved intact. Dr. Dollinger, when seventy years old and cursed by insomnia, learned by heart three books and the 'Odyssey' in order that he might be able to repeat them to himself in the silent watches of the night. Henry Dandolo, Gibbon tells us, was elected Doge of Venice when eighty-four, and lived till ninety-seven, shining in his last years as one of the most illustrious men of his time."

AGES WRONGLY ESTIMATED

"Old Abe" Lincoln Only 52 When Inaugurated

Indianapolis News. In no one thing, perhaps, has one generation after another been more at fault than in the popular estimate of the ages of the great men of their day. Abraham Lincoln had been in the presidential chair only a few months when the men of the armies east and west affectionately termed him "Old Abe." Yet on his visit to Indianapolis, while on his way to be inaugurated at Washington, he announced at the old Bates House, February 14th, 1861, that day as his fifty-second birthday.

Armand Jean du Plessis du Richelieu, the great French cardinal, we have seen portrayed on the stage by Lawrence Barrett and others as an aged and decrepit man. He was, at his death only fifty-seven years old.

Shakespeare in his historical dramas has had much to do with giving succeeding generations erroneous estimates of ages of several English kings. Henry VI is usually thought of as a man well up in years at the time of his death. He died in his forty-sixth year. His ancestor, John of Gaunt, "time-honored Lancaster," died at fifty-nine.

James I, always represented as an old man, died at fifty-nine. In the poem of "Rosamond," King Henry, born in 1133 and dying in 1189, was only fifty-six. The French admiral, Coligny, murdered in the St. Bartholomew massacre, represented as a very old man, was only fifty-three. This also was the span of life of Henry VII of England.

Messrs. Russel and Edward Wort, Lanark, who have been west prospecting for some time, returned home not long ago and have decided to take over the business formerly conducted by Noonan & Farrier. W. H. McFarlane, who has been a member of the Lanark Era staff for several years will take a position on the Sudbury Mining News.

So that you may use less flour, we do what a home cook would do if she were in our place. From every shipment of wheat delivered at our mills we take a ten pound sample. We grind this into flour. Bread is baked from the flour. We find that some samples make more bread and better bread than others. So we keep the shipment from which the more and better bread comes. The others we sell. You save money by using flour that bears this name. And you get better bread.

REMARKABLE OLD FAMILY BIBLE

W. C. Mickle, K. C., of Belleville, former president of the Ontario Bar association, owns what is probably the oldest Bible in Ontario. It was published in A. D. 1700. That is a long time ago and the world has seen many changes down through those two hundred and fourteen years. At the time it came into existence, there was no United States of America, and George Washington had not yet been born, nor had the great Napoleon appeared on the scene. The Bible has been in the Mikel family since 1754, one hundred and sixty years ago, and six generations of the family have thumbed and gazed upon the old book. It is five inches thick from cover to cover, fourteen inches long and nine inches wide. The binding consists of wood covered with leather. It contains one hundred and twenty-three illustrations about six inches square with a large portrait engraved the full size of the book on the second page. Judging from the expense attached to publishing at the time this volume was published, it must have cost a considerable sum, but its value is now, no doubt, many times its original cost.

A few years after the close of the war of American Independence, young Godlove Mikel, who had fought on the side of the British decided to come to Canada, and his mother gave him the Bible. It was somewhat big and clumsy to carry around but he and his family have stuck to it pretty well through all the vicissitudes from early pioneer life down to the present time.

It is something to trace descent back to a man who started life with a big Bible and a man like Godlove and it says something for the parents who gave him that start.
