R. WALDRON

IS IN OLD FOLKS' CLUB

COUNT OKUMA, JAPAN'S PREMIER IS ONE-LEGGED.

Is in the Society of Centenarians Where Eighty is the Minimum Age of Admission—Insists He Will Live 125 Years.

Count Okuma, the one-legged new premier of Japan, is not only a very old man, but is also president of a very remarkable society, known as the Hyakunin-Kai, that is, the Society of Centenarians to which persons of 80 years and over alone are eligible. Count Okuma contends that a man should be able to live, under proper conditions for at least 125 years, and has announced his determination to survive to that age.

The society has about 500 members, the majority of them residents in Tokio, though the oldest of them, a woman named Nami Shimuka, aged 113, invariably travels all the way from the Yamaguchi prefecture to the capital to attend the tri-monthly meetings.

These are usually held at Count Okuma's metropolitan residence and the conversation on these occasions turns largely on problems of diet, on the most efficacious means of warding off the infirmities of age, the eyesight, the hearing and last, but not least, the necessity of teeth not only for purposes of mastication but likewise for distinct enunciation.

There is a general impression that in Japan, where both boys and girls mature so early, mothers of 14 being the rule rather than the exception, the people are prematurely, from a western point of view, and that they are quite old by the time they reach 40.

Count Okuma's Society of Centenarians and Centenarians, and its membership of 500 seems to disprove this idea, and to demonstrate that both men and women are just as apt to attain the years of the Psalmist as Americans and Europeans.

A remarkable feature of this society is the wonderful mental and physical vigor of those belonging thereto. Many of them dispense with spectacles. Most of them come on foot to the meetings of Count Okuma's house, after from a considerable distance. The only point in which they seem weak appears to be in their hearing, and it is noticeable that when any address is being delivered, there is a pretty general raising of the hands to the ears. Count Okuma's hearing, however, is perfect, and he is amazingly energetic and active, in spite of the loss of his leg.

It is a wonder that the count survived the injury. For his leg was blown off by means of a revolutionary bomb, hurled into his carriage one day when he was driving away from the department of foreign affairs in 1889.

It is difficult to realize that he was already minister of finance of Japan in 1890, holding that office for the following twelve years during which time he sent General Williams, of New York, to negotiate a loan, the first foreign loan of Japan in the United States.

When he took office in 1892, the country was in a state of chaos, owing to the civil war which had just come to an end. The administration to which he belonged was called upon to meet not only the cost of the war but also that of the construction of an entirely new system of government, built upon the ruins of that which had gone before, the foundation of schools, colleges and universities, of the organization and armament of a brand new army and navy and also to take over the debts and obligations incurred by the Shogunate, and by the daimios, or feudal rulers of almost autonomous provinces.

That Count Okuma should have found means to face all these expenses, and to devise and create the necessary resources, speaks volumes for his positive genius in the matter of financial statesmanship.

Count Okuma is very tall, much taller than the majority of his countrymen, has a large, clean-shaven face, and high forehead, the expression of his face being unusually set and determined, thus presenting a striking contrast to the ordinarily so mobile features of the Japanese.

He has a well-merited reputation for great tenacity of purpose, entertains a very keen sense of national pride, and of what is due by foreign powers to the dignity of the Empire of the Rising Sun, and in to-day the only survivor of that band of so-called elder statesmen, to whom modern Japan may be said to owe her existence.

CITY AND VICINITY.

The collegiate hockey players who won the junior Intercollegiate Hockey Union championship last season, are to receive the gold signet rings. After Paving Contract.

J. F. Reid, of Windsor, who had the contract for the Wellington street pavement, is in the city on business. He will put in a tender for the paving to be put down on Princess street between Clergy and Alfred street, and will also put in tenders for repair work in the pavement put down by his company.

Autolst in Trouble.

A citizen was summoned before the magistrate on Thursday morning, charged with running his auto mobile without the necessary numbers, both on the front and rear of the car. He stated that he had the misfortune to lose the numbers off the front of the car, but had written to the office of the provincial secretary for a few numbers. The case was enlarged until Saturday.

Full Fare Now.

The merchants of Kingston are mourning the loss of many farmers and others who, prior to the cutting off of the Thursday low rates on the C.P.R. regularly made a trip to the city on Thursday.

Last Thursday was the last day of the low rates and there were over 200 people who took advantage of the cut to come to Kingston.

The low rate was a single fare return. This old rate, $1.20 return to the city from Parham, is raised now to $2.

A Military Tournament

A big military tournament is planned for Watertown, N.Y., in the way of a 4th of July celebration, the most elaborate ever attempted. Troops from Madison barracks and Kingston, Ont., as well as company "C" will be invited to participate. Kingston, Ont., troops will be urged to attend. There are thousands of persons residing in Watertown who came years ago from Canada and who extend a warm welcome to the soldiers from across the border.

Apostolic Faith Meetings.

Beginning to-night at 7.30, gospel services will be conducted at 213 Princess street, until Sunday, May 24th. Earl W. Clark, returned missionary, and evangelist, and Mrs. Clark, (granddaughter of Mrs. Woodworth-Etter) will have charge. Also Pastor McCready, of Sand Bay, and other workers, are expected. Meetings nightly. Sabbath services at 9 a.m., 2 p.m., and 7 p.m. All welcome.

Telling Scott's Peerless Story.

It is but seldom that an officer of the royal navy is given permission to leave the service temporarily to lecture, or in fact do any outside business, so the furlough granted Commander Evans to tell the story of the Scott expedition is the best evidence of the high regard with which this youngest officer of his rank is regarded by the admiralty. Hon. Winston Churchill even went further in this approval by presiding at Commander Evans' first lecture in England at Albert hall, when a new record was made in England both for the largest lecture audience, and also for the largest receipts—in itself a gratifying reward for a man who has spent the best twelve years of his life south of the Antarctic circle. Commander Evans' lecture here will be about the last that he will make, for he is on his return from the Pacific coast. Everywhere the greatest honors have been paid him. We can only trust that when he comes here, he will receive the same welcome as has awaited him elsewhere.

TO MAKE NEW JAW AND CHIN FOR WOMAN

Doctors Hope to Aid Patient Distigured By Suicidal Shot

Burlington, N.J., May 7.—If the plans of the surgeons carry as they hope, Mrs. Clarence Stokley, of this city, will go through the rest of her life with a silver jaw plate and an artificial chin. Mrs. Stokley, while dependent, one day last week, tried to kill herself with a shotgun. The charge carried away her chin, part of the lower jaw and several of her teeth. Recovering consciousness in the Burlington county hospital, the woman expressed a desire to live and the doctors are planning to give her the artificial substitutes for the features she lost and which will disfigure her for life. They say there is very good chance of success of the experiment.
