KING'S ONLY DAUGHTER

Princess Mary Unique in Hanoverian Dynasty.

London, May 20.—Princess Mary, who was seventeen years old on April 25th, occupies a unique position in the annals of the Hanoverian dynasty.

Since 1714 there has been no other "only daughter" of a sovereign; for, though George IV had an only child, the Princess Charlotte, she died before her father's accession to the throne. Another notable instance of a royal only daughter is Princess Mary's cousin, the Princess Victoria Louise of Brunswick. Princess Mary will conform, in the matter of marriage, to the later rather than the earlier traditions of her house. Queen Victoria's eldest daughter was a bride of nearly a year's standing on her eighteenth birthday, but all her sisters waited longer. Princess Alice married at nineteen; Princess Helena was just over twenty when she married Prince Christian; Princess Louise married the Duke of Argyll three days after her twenty-third birthday; and Princess Beatrice had passed twenty-eight on her wedding day. King Edward's two married daughters both came of age before marriage. The Princess Royal was twenty-two, and the queen of Norway twenty-six. Princess Arthur of Connaught had passed twenty-two on her wedding day.

There used to be a time when all a young man had to do in order to make good was to marry his employer's daughter and succeed to the business. As a matter of fact, one woman is as anxious to pay another woman's car fare as one man is to pay another's gas bill. Speaking of paradoxes—did you ever notice that a man with a big head wears the smallest hat?
