THE LONG BOW.
Still Used by Hunters in Jungles at Ceylon.

Bows and arrows are still in use in some parts of the world. Even now there are a few tribes of savage Veddas, running wild in the jungles of the south-eastern part of the island of Ceylon, who make their living by means of birds, catching fish and killing small animals with bows and iron-headed arrows. They are the descendants of the aboriginal inhabitants of the island and number less than 4000 persons, representing a little over 1 per cent. of the population of Ceylon. But, although they dwell in caves or bark huts and lead the wildest kind of savage lives, they are shy, simple folk, and anything but dangerous. In stature, they are slight, seldom more than 5 feet tall, and have extremely small heads. There are, few if any, other savage tribes that do not now use fire-arms.
