The Story of the $750,000 Stolen Neck-lace.

An exact reproduction of the famous Max Meyer Pearl Necklace, which mysteriously disappeared from the registered mail between Paris and London, is on view in our South Window. It is an interesting exhibit demonstrated in detail, telling the whole of its recovery. Newspapers everywhere in Europe and America contained sensational reports of the loss. Remember, you may never again have the opportunity of seeing this remarkable demonstration—how a big robbery may be committed—as we control this special permit in Kingston. We have a limited number of Necklaces, telling the whole story, which are distributed free in our store while they last.

Twin Brothers.

Lagark, Ont. Many amusing incidents occur over the identity of John and William James, two well-known Lagark and Dalhousie farmers. John and William are twin brothers and look much alike. When a person meets either of them alone it is perplexing to decide whether to salute him with "Good-day, John," or "Good-day, William."

One day John went into an hotel for dinner. When he had finished William sat down in the place vacated by John a few moments earlier, but neither of them saw which other had not William know that John had been at the table before him. The going of John and the coming of William took place while the waitress was absent from the dining hall. Upon returning she found the man she thought was John finished with his meal and apparently waiting for more. Like all earnest employees concerned about the welfare of their employers, the waitress pondered the excessive cost of living and decided that she couldn't give one man two meals at single rates. On the other hand, William became embittered over the waitress' neglect and finally arose and left the table in a state of rage and hunger. When the brothers met later the matter was explained and both enjoyed the joke immensely.

Potatoes, Potatoes, Potatoes. If you want the finest table potatoes, try a bag of Green Mountain, at James Crawford's.
