It is known authoritatively that the original terms set by the mediators or constitutionalist participation—the declaration of an armistice and broadening the scope of discussion from international to internal questions, still is not acceptable to the constitutionalists, though official word to that effeet is lacking.

It is understood that a dilpomatic way of approaching internal questions would meet the approval of the contitutionalists, but the mediators are insistent on an armistice. The constitutionalists want to know what the peace plan comprehends before they agree to a suspension of hostilities. They claim that when a revolutionary array is once started in a comprehensive military campaign it cannot stopped for a week or a short period without making troops restless and endangering the control which various chiefs have over their men.
