THE KING OF BELGIUM LAKE ONTARIO PARK

WHOSE STAND FORCED BRITAIN TO INTERVENE.

In The European War—Queen Elizabeth a Strikingly Handsome Woman—King of Hohenzollern Descent.

King Albert of Belgium, whose determination to fight Germany rather than allow his country to be used as a base of operations against France, and whose appeal to Great Britain to help him preserve Belgian neutrality and independence was the concluding factor which determined Great Britain to plunge into the European war, is intensely popular with his own subjects.

He has none of the vices of his late uncle, King Leopold, and, in fact, is in almost every respect the direct opposite of the late monarch. King Albert is the second son of the Count of Flanders, who was the younger brother of Leopold. Albert's elder brother died, and as Leopold had no son, he became the heir to the throne, as women are debarred under the Belgian laws. On the death of his father, several years ago, Albert inherited a large fortune.

The King's full name is Albert Leopold Clement Maria Mainrad. His mother was the Princess Maria of Hohenzollern, and he was born April 8th, 1875. His paternal grandmother was a daughter of Louis Philippe, King of France. He is finely educated, and is thoroughly unostentatious. Stubbornness of purpose is the chief characteristic he inherited from his Hohenzollern mother.

He is fond of athletics, and because of this has changed a naturally delicate constitution into one much more robust.

At the time of his elder brother's tragic and mysterious death a few years ago his delicate health gave rise to universal fears that he would not live to grow to manhood. He is all and entirely looking, well set up, and always had the reputation of being of a far more studious temperament than his brother, Prince Baudouin.

A Mysterious Death. The latter met his death under circumstances still shrouded with mystery, in a house situated in one of the most fashionable thoroughfares of the Belgian capital, which has remained untenanted ever since, and is pointed out to strangers as the scene of a tragedy which according to popular rumor, bore many striking analogies to that of Meyerling, which cost the Crown Prince of Austria his life.

The King has been an extensive traveler. He has visited every country in Europe and visited the United States in 1898. A devotee of the bicycle, he has always preferred that to horseback riding.

Queen Elizabeth became the wife of King Albert fourteen years ago, their wedding having been celebrated in royal state on Oct. 1st, 1900. Their union was described at the time as a genuine love match, and it was said they had similar and congenial tastes. Both are highly educated and fond of literature, music, and art.

Queen Elizabeth, who was a Bavarian princess, is a strikingly handsome woman. She has a long, oval face, with fine features, and boasts of hair of a pale golden tint that surrounds her like an aureole. She has traveled extensively with her father and mother, one of her trips extending into the interior of Siberia. Music is a passion with her, and she is an accomplished violinist. As a horsewoman she is without fear, and is said to ride as well and gracefully as her aunt, the late Empress of Austria. A few years ago she developed talent as a dramatist and wrote a play entitled "Romunda," which was produced in Brussels in March, 1908, causing a stir in the Belgian capital.
