This triple alliance could hardly fail to accomplish its end. It was only a question of means to use and time to bring the end about. . . A towering, united, invincible eclesiasticism sets itself for the over throw of a teacher whose spirit and doctrine is justly recognized as entirely inimical. It had to do it, if it would perpetuate itself. It was the finstinctive dictate of self-preserva-. The "tribute" in dispute, literally called "census," was a poll tax levied on the people exclusively for the purse of the Roman emperor. It was like "Peter's pence," which is for the Pope personally. In this instance it was a sign of submission and its payment equivalent to an expression of loyalty to the sovereign. No part of it was ever used for local purposes or improvements. That is what made it superlatively odious. It was a red flag to passion. It was a bone of constant and flerce contention. . . No nicer question of casuistry could by any means have been propounded. But to steal the livery of a truth-seeker, Germans Sweep On It Like a Tidal to compass the moral ruin of another, was the foulest crime in the long black catalogue of the misdeeds of that pharisaical ecclesiasticism which By Capt. As such, but without justifying the proression, the aposle uses the soldier as the emblem of efficiency. He urges his converts to be good soldiers. In our day the soldier is not the unit of power. He is, on the contrary, a passing incident in the current civilization. There are already sure tokens of the approach of the prophet's day when the art of war will not so much as be learned any more, when here will be no more garments rolled in blood, and when the implements as sof death will be converted into those of peace and life.
