

LOSES FIVE PLAYERS

COLLEGIATE RUGBY TEAM IS MUCH WEAKENED

As Those Who Have Left Were Among the Best — The Players Had a Workout on Thursday.

The Kingston Collegiate Institute rugby team, which won the junior intercollegiate rugby union last fall, will be considerably crippled this fall owing to the loss of a number of its best players.

J. W. Kelly, manager of the team, when speaking to the Whig, stated that the team had suffered the loss of the complete back division. "Punk" Mackenzie, who was looked upon as the best punter in the junior intercollegiate last fall, is leaving the city in the course of a few days. "Bill" Evans, who captained the team, has accepted a position in the Bank of Toronto. "Jimmy" Stewart has graduated and will be likely seen with Queen's, while it is doubtful if Harry Cooke will return. Ross Lyons, who did all the heavy line plunging, passed his matriculation and will likely enter college.

The matter of selecting players who will fill the gaps is no light undertaking. Mackenzie will be the hardest man to replace. Carroll, who played on the second team, will in all likelihood, catch a place on the senior line.

On Thursday afternoon the pupils had their first work-out of the season when a number of players were down on Queen's campus kicking the ball.

To Watch For Thieves.

Several motor boat owners who keep their craft in the neighborhood of the cotton mill have clubbed together to place a watch upon their respective properties. Then was beside other guilty parties caught entering any of these boat-houses.

It is estimated that over five hundred dollars worth of brass fittings etc., was stolen from the various boat-houses last winter which resulted in many having to go down into their pockets to pay for new fixtures before they could start out last spring. In view of this the same parties are determined that it is not going to be repeated. It has now been unanimously decided by all to "chip in" and pay a reliable watchman.

Looking For Big Business.

It was in 1904 that the Grand Trunk Pacific surveying party stopped upon the shore of Prince Rupert, then showing the moss of accumulated ages. An Indian village was not far away but at the first glance the party was rather discouraged. When, however, the harbor was examined, the back country, the timber, the fisheries, the one agricultural land, the native rock on which the city might stand—they determined that this barren but bold and lofty spot should be the site of the Pacific terminus of the new system.

Today that city has 6,000 people and is reaching out. There was much rejoicing over the arrival of the first Grand Trunk Pacific train two weeks ago. For this the people had been patiently waiting for years. They had invested their money, and the train did not come. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick we learn on good authority; but the train came in without fuss or feathers or ceremony of any kind; and the people knew that their future was assured.

The Pacific Trunk Pacific officials say that in a very short time there will be a big business between Prince Rupert and the other provinces east of the Rockies.

Not only will there be the product of the fisheries, but there will be unlimited lumber, which the provinces want while Prince Rupert can take manufactured articles in constantly augmented quantities.
