INSTALLING NEW INVENTION

In Long-Distance Telephone Lines—James Mouk Here.

James Mouk, of the Bell Telephone company, is in the city superintending the installation of a new invention, used in long-distance telephone work. He is using coils, invented by Prof. Pupin, of Cornell university, who some time ago started the electric work by a radical change of methods for this work. In telegraphing and telephoning work the old principle was followed, of increasing the amount of current used by relays. In the new method the current is decreased by additional resistances. There are eight of these coils between the city and Montreal on the trunk lines. Mr. Mouk is at present installing one near the Cataract bridge.
