THE SECOND CONTINGENT. Canada has undertaken to raise second contingent for active mili tary service. It is not for the aver age man to ask whether there necessity. It takes time in which to organize for effective and aggressive work, and if the second contingent will be wanted later is imperative that recruiting be begun now. There can be no ground for a division of opinion as to the attitude of Canada in this war. She is part of the great British empire. She approves of the British government which was faithful to treaty obligations and faced conflict rather than repudiate them any particular. A small section the people, represented by Bouras sa and those who think with him. hold that Canada should not any troops to Europe until Britain, that entered the war voluntarily, had exhausted her resources and put her last man in the field. Away with that kind of talk which has the smack of treason. This war is Canada's quite as much as Britain's, rected by a special report at and if the War Office, and that means Lord Kitchener, says it wants closely the books it printed and more men, and still more, to deempire, they must be supplied.
