Peter W. Meldrin, of Savannah, Ga., recently elected president of the United States Bar Association, is a first cousin of R. F. and John Elliott, of this city. Mr. Meldrin succeeded ex-President W. T. Taft to head of the bar association.

An article called "The Blindfold Game," reprinted in the Living Age for October 31st, from the Pall Mall magazine, describes graphically the operation an efficiency that modern engine of war, the submarine, which many naval experts look upon as likely to put dreadnoughts and super dreadnoughts out of commission.

SILO WHISKEY POPULAR DRINK Farmer Celebrates on Diluted Corn Ensilage and Passes News On Washington Post. An accidental discovery made recently by a Missouri agriculturist is calculated to do more for the "back-to-the-farm" movement than anything that has happened in rural life since some genius converted barbed wire fences into a complete telephone service, and put every gossip-loving farmer's wife on a party wire.

This Missouri corn king, through one of those fortuities such as have given to the world the telegraph, and gun-powder, and steam engines, and other great inventions, fell in to his silo while pottering around the barnyard one afternoon; and before he could scramble out had swallowed a tremendous gulp of liquid at the bottom, which had been produced by fermented ensilage.

Inclined at first to rage, his spatters of distress were quickly turned to ejaculations of delight, as he swept over his entranced mind a realization that he had discovered a way to beat the local option laws and the city liquor man who sold him bottled prussic acid and prune juice with a deceptive label on it. "The silo had been a still-house, and he hadn't known it!"

Quickly the news spread among the neighbors. It crossed Missouri in a night, and sweet Kansas fell a prey to fire. In a couple of days it was up in Iowa, and the news had become the sole topic of conversation at every crossroads' general store in Nebraska. In a week the "Saturday night importation of 'red eyes' from 'town' had fallen off 50 per cent. It had half a hundred couples in the corn belt, and the St. Paul and Chicago supply houses were deluged with orders for silos.

STUDY OF RED HEADS. Are fiery-tempered in America, But Not in Europe.

The significance of red hair may seem to be a trivial academic subject of no practical importance, but there is some evidence that these people have a much higher death rate in America than in Europe, as the study of the cause and effect of "fieriness" assumes considerable importance in pathology and therapy, according to American Medicine.

"It is true," says the writer, "that Albinoes are defective, and though a few survive if carefully guarded from every harm, the majority meet early death, and few, if any, are able to make their own living in an efficient way. It is now said that the investigations of Major Hurst, a noted eugenicist, in an English village of Dartage, where there are many red-headed boys and girls, show that it is always hereditary and never arises anew. He thinks that all cases are derived from a single remote case which appeared as a 'sport' or 'mutation' from some unknown cause."

"The condition is recessive," and according to Mendel's law it may disappear for several generations, particularly in dark families. If one parent is red and the other dark the children are rarely red, but if both parents are red the children are always red. In England they are not any more fiery-tempered than the rest of the population, but this does not seem to be true in America, where something in the climate—probably the excessive light—irritates them, keeps nerves on edge, becomes resistance to disease and prevents efficiency."

Deeronto lost one of its oldest residents on Thursday last in the person of Mrs. Henry Bunting, aged eighty-one years. She is survived by one daughter.
