Grand Llama of Thibet Provides England With 1,000 Hereditary Fighting Men, and Native Rulers Vie in Placing Money at Government's Disposal.

That one thousand hereditary ighting men drawn from the nomad tribes of Thibet are with the British expeditionary forces in Northern France, together with a fully equipped camel corps from one of the Indian states, was the information contained in a letter received yesterday by a prominent New York man from an Englishman who occupies a high position with the British government at Bombay.

The Thibetan troops were personally offered to the government by the Grand Llama, who, in his letter to the Viceroy, said the writer, made it known that he had instructed all the holy men throughout Thibet to offer daily prayer for the success of the allies. The despatch of a camel corps is of particular interest in view of its being the first military unit of the kind to serve on the con-
