

Our $15 Overcoats Are Prizes

A man came in on Saturday and said, "Show me the best overcoat you can give me for $15.00." We got busy at once and showed him one of our warm storm-resisting overcoats, with convertible or shawl collars, guaranteed to keep out the cold and storm. Very swell, you know.

He examined the coat and tailoring, carefully took note of all the new style features, tried on the coat, stood before the mirror a moment, then said, "It's a peach; I'll take it."

We've more of these "peaches" at $15.00. We've all the new models and we're at your service.

At eleven o'clock this morning, in the Y.M.C.A. room, Rev. D. E. Foster, of Trenton, and Rev. J. A. Shaver, of Pietou, read papers on "The Abraham Cycle of Stories." Rev. G. A. COMING TO KINGSTON.

Major-Gen. Hughes to inspect the 21st Battalion. An Ottawa despatch says: Major-General the Hon. Sam Hughes will go to Kingston to-night, where he will inspect on Friday the troops now in training there for the second contingent.

General Hughes has been busily at work at his office since his return to Ottawa, and did not attend yesterday's cabinet meeting. There is a well-defined rumor here to the effect that some friction exists between the minister of militia and his colleague here in the cabinet, especially in regard to some questions connected with contracts for war supplies and other matters which have been assumed by Hon. Robert Rogers and a committee of the cabinet, who have taken the matter out of General Hughes' hands. It is stated here that the minister is waiting for the return of Premier Borden at the end of the week before making his appearance at any cabinet meeting.

FOUND DEAD IN CELLAR.

B. E. Aylesworth, Bath, Died Of Paralytic Stroke. On Monday morning the body of B. E. Aylesworth, of Bath, was found in the cellar of his home. He ceased to be a well-to-do resident of that place, and was about seventy years of age. How long the old man had lain in the cellar is not known, but at any rate when Dr. Northrop, who examined the remains, arrived the body was quite cold. It is thought that deceased had been seized with a stroke of paralysis. David Aylesworth, his son, found the remains and immediately notified the authorities. This is the second death of this nature which has occurred at Bath during the past month.

SOUTH AMERICA FAILING TO MAINTAIN NEUTRALITY.

The Chilean Disaster Occurred Because the enemy Had Use of Wireless Stations.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Charges by Great Britain that certain South American countries are failing to maintain their neutrality have served to develop new responsibilities for the United States because of its observance of the Monroe doctrine.

It became known to-day that the British government instead of directly bringing to the attention of the South American governments its neutrality charges, the suggestion was made that recognizing the peculiar position the United States occupies in regard to the foreign affairs of many Latin American governments it seemed fitting that the attention of the United States first should be called to the alleged violations of neutrality. Further, it was strongly hinted that the United States should take it upon itself to call the attention of the South American governments to the alleged violations with a view to putting an end to them.

The inference seems to be plain that if the United States did not care to do this then the British government would be forced to proceed in the matter, but the British suggested it would better suit the status of the United States, and thus avoid any possible irritation.

It is claimed by the British government that the German squadron off the coast of Chile has had the use of wireless stations in Ecuador and Colombia, by means of which it received information as to the movements of the enemy's ships and made arrangements regarding supplies. It is maintained by the British, and generally agreed to here unofficially, that the German commander Admiral Von Spee, never could have effected the concentration of his forces at sea off the Chilean coast at the exact moment for meeting the British squadron had he not been in communication with the shore by some means. Such communication with belligerent ships within the jurisdiction of the United States regards as clearly in violation of neutrality, as it is demonstrated by the vigorous action of President Wilson in laying a drastic censorship on all radio stations within the jurisdiction of the United States. Though the question was a new one owing to the recent development of radio communication, the United States government promptly took a firm stand in regard to it.

It is charged that coal and other supplies have been conveyed from South American ports to some island which the German squadron has made a base of operations. There are many fine harbors in the Galapagos Islands, but they are practically deserted and seldom visited by ships. For cruisers operating out of reach of any home port they would make an ideal emergency base in time of war.

The British representations to the United States government on this subject were unwelcome to the state department, because of the number of embarrassing and delicate questions they raise. This government would regret exceedingly being placed in a position where it would be compelled by the force of circumstances to take up with any South American government a charge of violation of neutrality in favor of any of the European belligerents.

The raising of such a question would be embarrassing in relations with the South American governments and also might cause some feelings in the countries which were said to point by the alleged violation of neutrality. Finally, it would be an acceptance of a measure of responsibility for things in Latin America with the United States government does not desire.
