That India is loyal to Great Britained in a letter from Franklin D. Cogswell of Ewing Christian College, Allahabad, India, which says in part:

Widespread restlessness and discontent there may be among the 315,000,000 that make up India's population, but the violent preachments of educated Indians domiciled abroad scarcely represent the true nature of the opposition to British rule in India or the aims of the most influential Indian leaders. The goal of the national movement, as freely expressed for years from platform and press by the men who command the widest respect, is self-government within the Empire. India wants the same privileges that are enjoyed by the autonomous dominions of Great Britain; at the present time the great portion of her citizens appear to be looking no further.

Thus instead of there being any wild outbreak of rebellion in the hour of Britain's trial in the west there has been a noteworthy demon- his military prospects. stration of loyalty throughout the peninsula. "Britain's war is our war" often regarded as pretty tall, was by held in every important town, and as an opportunity for India to show that she is worthy of the place in the Empire that she has been de-

It is not only from astute leaders who grasp the political significance of the position in which India now finds herself that present manifestations of loyalty are coming. The war is the according topic of every gossiping folk whose hearts are incapable of any feeling more mixed than that of simple devotion to the King-Emperor are hoping and Praying for the success of his forces. In a country so divided by social and religious differences as India, it would be strange if there were unanimity in such whole hearted expressions of loyalty as the foregoing. Admiral John Jellicoe, whom every Briton believes, if he gets half a chance, will prove himself a modern Nelson and win another and even greater Trafalgar, is also a man of very moderate stature. And it is a truism that "stockiness" is the rule in the navy. Perhaps salt checks growth! But, whatever it does with the rest of the body, it does not seem to stunt the wits. Witness that gallant little Japanese admiral, Togo. He had brains, courage and skill in a very high degree. Napoleon, the greatest general of all time, the man to whom all military men look to-day as their exemplar and model in strategy and tactics, whose genius still dominates warfare, was notoriously short of stature. Both the leaders of the armies of the west, French and Joffre, are litsaid: "We have often met in this the men. Joffre looks like a healthy, good natured, prosperous, stout grocer.

John French is a little taller than Roberts, but not much; yet it was as a cavalry leader of infinite daring and unsullied success that he sprang to the front in the South African war. Where so many bigger men failed French succeeded, and to-day he has the confidence of the whole British race, as a little man who is capable of great things and intends to do them.

AN ARMY CORPS.

How Divisions, Regiments, Companies, Etc., Are Made Up. Curious though it may seem, it is not quite correct to refer, as many people do, to the Indian and Colonial troops as part of the "British army." Strictly speaking, the term "British army" only applies to the land forces of the United Kingdom, which con-sist of the regular army and the Territorial army, and that part of the former which serves in the British Dominions oversea, it being customary to refer to these troops as the "British army" in contradistinction to the "Native army" or "Indian army" in India, and to the "Local Forces" in South Africa and in the British Colonies.

The regular army, whether at home or abroad, is paid for by the Imperial Exchequer, except in India (although certain colonies pay contributions towards its upkeep). India, however, while paying for its derfully well in the ever-acceptable button towards the cost of troops at

> This is divided into various army corps, according to the number of men sent to the front, an army corps comprising infantry, cavalry, and artillery, in command of general officers. The British army, in times of peace, is divided into six army corps, half of which are composed of regular troops, and the remainder Territorials. The strength of an army corps is not definitely fixed, but consists of alout 40,000 men.

A British infantry division is about half an army corps, and is the smallest tactical unit possessing all arms. It usually consists of twelve battalions, each of 1,000 men. In addition to this, there is at least two squadrons of cavalry, from thirty-six to seventy-two guns, beside field companies of engineers, medical supply, transport, and signal services.
