"SHOP EARLY."
*****
The wise merchant has his Christmas goods in early, and is now advertising and displaying them.
The wise buyer is on hand as soon as they are on display.
Selecting the Christmas gifts ought to be the most blessed part of the giving. It is in the selection of the gift that the loving, sympathetic thought is given.
Fitting gifts can be selected only at leisure. There must be time to think of the ones for whom the gifts are chosen.
There must be opportunity to examine many things and from among them all choose wisely.
In the great crowds of later Christmas buyers all will be confused, rush and grab. In the pushing jam it will be impossible to think clearly, to inspect articles with any care or to choose with any discrimination.
Besides, the best things will be gone before the rush begins.
The wise Christmas buyer is the early one and carries away the prizes. The later ones find only the things that have been much handled and many times rejected.
The thoughtful few do their shopping in the early morning. It is then the stores are in order and the salespeople fresh and cheerful.
It is then selections can be made with care and comfort.
Later in the day the unthinking, pushing, grabbing crowds rush in, the salespeople are over-tired, and all is confusion.
Buying under such conditions is torture. Selecting gifts under such conditions is little less than insult.
The Christmas spirit should not be confined to the giving of gifts. It ought to show itself in the buying and to overflow in consideration for the over-worked girls behind the counters.
If, because of the rush, they cannot give you good service, the fault is all your own. You have no need to go at rush times.
