OLD HUNDRED.

Written by Man Who Refused Lodgings to Nell Gwyn.

The most famous, and in many ways most inspiring, of all religious songs is the doxology commonly known as "Old Hundred," or "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." The lines, known in every corner of the earth, were written by Dr. Thomas Ken, Bishop of Bath and Wells, England, under Charles II. about 1683. "The civilized world was held in awful suspense during the 56 days Chinese. When the allied forces entered the city, the heartfelt rejoicing of the men, women and children, who had faced a living death for nearly two months cannot be described. Rockets blazed in the air, cannon smashed the yellow roofs of the Forbidden City, and soldiers and civilians made the welkin ring with cheers; but the most thrilling and soul-inspiring incident connected with the celebration of their deliverance, was the assembling of the missionaries about the Bell Tower and singing Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

Foxhunters Lack Mounts. Practically every pack of fox hounds throughout the Old Country has been placed in a difficulty this season with regard to its mounts, the call upon hunters for military ser vice having naturally been greater than for that of any other stamp of trouble by curtailing their number of days per week, and it has, of course, been possible in many cases to get together a number of moderate horses which were unsuitable for military work, while since the war animals have been sufficiently schooled to make passable hunters in emergency.
