

DESTRUCTION WROUGHT BY "BABY KILLERS" IN SCARBOROUGH, HARTLEPOOL AND WHITBY

Above are shown a few pictures of the damage in Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby done by the German warships in the recent bombardment. (1) The bar of the Grand Hotel, Scarborough after the bombardment. The moral lesson seems to be, stay out of bars. (2) The coast guard signal station at Whitby which the Germans evidently found to be a good target. (3) ancient and famous Whitby Abbey, (4) in William street, West Hartlepool. This hole was made in the wall of the Royal Hotel, Scarborough. (5) House of Mr. Dixon in Scarborough. Mr. Dixon escaped but four grandchildren were killed and two injured. The Right Way To Strike a Match

Once in a while, we have complaints about our matches breaking in use. This is no fault of the match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected and seasoned wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly when the flame comes. This prevents any undue leverage on the match, and instant prevents one getting one's finger burned."

DAYLIGHT MADE BY A SCIENTIST.

Natural Effect Produced by Mixing Colored Illuminations—Discovery By Herbert Ives.

The London Post.

It is possible to produce white light by mixing colored lights. For colors may look exactly alike which are, nevertheless, composed of quite different radiations. A mixture of yellow light and blue light produces a white indistinguishable from one in which all the spectrum colors are present. From red blue and green mixtures not only white light may be produced but all the colors—and hence all the colors formed by the addition and subtraction of these, that is, the colors of nature.

It must be clearly understood, however, that these color matchings are subjective in our eyes; they look the same, but the spectroscopes at once shows their composite character. Moreover, when these composite white lights, they reveal the composition indirectly by appearing to our eyes as different shades under the different white lights.

It is evident, therefore, that if an artificial daylight is to behave towards all kinds of colors exactly as real daylight does, it must not only look like daylight but must be identical with it, wave-length by wave-length throughout the spectrum.

This was the problem which Mr. Herbert Ives set himself to solve. It can hardly be solved with theoretical exactness, because bodies cannot be heated up to 5,000 degrees absolute; but practical efficiency will be secured if an illuminant can be secured of which the rainbow band consists of twenty-five to thirty equally spaced divisions resembling in general arrangement and luminosity that of the daylight band. One approximation is to be gained by the light from a vacuum tube of carbon dioxide; but it is not very efficient and is rather costly.

Another is to "add" colors to the light from a source of bright ill-lumination, is, for example to add the radiations of tungsten, which are reddish yellow, to those of mercury vapor, which are bluish. By this addition method is defective and leaves big gaps in the rainbow band.

The method which seems to promise most success is that of taking some body which can be heated to a very high degree of incandescence, such, for example, as the oxides of which incandescent gas mantles are composed, and of subtracting from the radiations which this body gives out these elements which are in excess. This subtraction is effected by the interposition of approximately colored glass or dye gelatine.

By this method it has been possible to construct glass receptacles in which colors can be matched as if by daylight, and even to make so-called "daylight spectacles" for use with gaslight. Mr. Ives also describes how a room could be constructed and lighted with a tolerably exact imitation of being filled with diffused daylight.

Monuments are mute reminders of those whom we soon forget. The easy job boy is quite likely to develop the shiftless man.

No Merry Widows in China.

Buffalo Herald.

There are no merry widows in China.

When a Chinese husband dies his widow is despised by every member of her family as a woman who has incurred the wrath of the gods.

This and other conditions among Chinese women was described by Miss Hie Ding Lin at a meeting of the Women's Trade Union League in Schiller Hall. Miss Linn is a senior medical student at the University of Illinois.

"Widows are not the only sufferers in China," she said. "After a formal introduction it is customary for one to ask 'May I know your honorable age?' in order to determine the current form of address.

"An older person is addressed by one form of 'you,' while a person younger than oneself is addressed by another form.

"The teachings of Confucius were blamed for the condition of Chinese women.

"'Prowess is woman's virtue,' is a teaching of Confucius which every man bears in mind," said Miss Lin. "The chief vices of women, according to Confucius, are that they eat and talk too much and fail to obey their mothers-in-law.

"Only when a person becomes a mother-in-law does she obtain complete liberty."

Miss Lin added that in China it is commonly believed women have no souls.

Our Practical Queen.

The practical mind as well as the patriotism of Queen Mary is strikingly illustrated by an incident which has been related by a member of the royal household. Her majesty was examining some goods from a west end shop the other day and asked the messenger if he had any of a certain kind. The latter replied that he was afraid there was nothing English of that sort to be obtained, all such goods having been bought in Germany.

"That," said Queen Mary, "is not the point. These goods are in English shops. They were bought before the war, and people ought to support the shopkeepers and take such stock out of their hands. Then, when such goods have been sold, we must insist on buying nothing possessing the German trade mark. It is a royal tint which will doubtless be quickly acted upon."
