THE LONELY CHILD.

Emma A. Lentz in the Mother's Magazine.

I live with auntie on the farm; she's nice as she can be; She says she means to do as well as she knows how by me; She bids me think if I've been good, she bids me say my prayers, And then she takes the light away and leaves me here upstairs; She does not peek the curtains in, or pat me on the head— The way my mother used to do before that she was dead!

And auntie says she never dreamed of bringing up a child; She hasn't any of her own, and children drive her wild; I try to be as still as still, and help her do the chores, And when I really have to cry I slip away outdoors, Then wash my eyes out in the brook to take away the red, Then never used to get that way when mother wasn't dead!

I think of how we used to go and make the loveliest talks, And how before I went to bed we were the sweetest folks; It was so dear to cuddle in the hollow of her arm, I never used to be afraid or think of any harm.

And, oh, the songs she loved to sing, the stories that she knew— I wonder if God sends the mothers more than children do?

TWO TRUTHS

How We Should Stand at Peace, How We Will Stand at War.

Herman Ridder in Staats Zeitung

Out of this war, however the contest of arms in Europe may go, we shall emerge a nation led by all of the present belligerents. A foregone conclusion Germany regarded our note to Great Britain as not forceful enough. Great Britain was needed that we addressed her at all.

We cannot serve two masters. Our only sure policy lies in service to one master—and that master is American interests. Whether Great Britain or Germany likes or dislikes this policy matters very little to us as a nation. We have a right to assert our privileges and no other power has the right to deny them.

There is not going to be any drawing to the United States into the war. We are as a people, divided as to the merits of the claims of the various conflicting interests. We are, on the other hand, a people united against foreign intimidation or interference. The man in Germany or in England who thinks for a moment that the American people—and I mean by this all the people of the United States—would not present a firm and united front to a foreign foe is lamentably mistaken.
