A Senator's Joke.
Senator Joseph E. Randall, of Louisiana, occasionally plays a cute little joke on the senate. It is just possible that Randall's jokes are entirely unconscious on his part and thence really less their most effective quality. A few days ago the senate was in the midst of discussing a taxation measure relating to the District of Columbia. It was not a question of nation-wide interest, yet because the senate was almost equally divided the situation in the chamber was tense. At a point in the discussion, Randall got recognition from the presiding officer, cleared his throat, and made ready to speak. All the other senators listened with the keenest interest to hear what Randall would say, for no one knew yet how he stood on the taxation measure, and his vote might decide it.
And what did Randall do?
He talked for an hour and a half about the Colombian treaty.
