

HOW A DEEP SEATED COUGH

And Sore Lungs Were Overcome by Vinol—Mr. Hillman's Statement of Facts Follows:

Camden, N. J. — "I had a deep seated cough, a run-down system and my lungs were awfully weak and sore. I am an electrician by occupation and my cough kept me awake nights so I thought at times I would have to give up. I tried everything everybody suggested and had taken so much medicine I was disgusted. One evening I read about Vinol and decided to give it a trial. Soon I noticed an improvement. I kept on taking it and today I am a well man. The soreness is all gone from my lungs, I do not have any cough and have gained fifteen pounds in weight and I am telling my friends that Vinol did it." — FRANK HILLMAN, Camden, N. J.

It is the curative, tissue-building influence of cods' livers aided by the blood-making, strength creating properties of tonic iron, contained in Vinol, that made it so successful in Mr. Hillman's case.

We ask every person in this vicinity suffering from weak lungs, chronic coughs, or a run-down condition of the system to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return your money if it fails to help you.

VANQUISHED VIRAGO

HOW O'CONNELL EMERGED WITH BRILLIANT VICTORY.

A Woman Who Was the Terror of the Town—Had Wonderful Vituperative Powers — O'Connell Re-inforced by Euclid.

In an article on "Old Dublin Streets" Mr. J. H. Halloran draws an amusing picture of a notorious virago named Moriarty, keeper of a small shop opposite the Court House. Her spirit, originally high and quietly re-energized by the other variety termed ardent, and her extraordinary range of picturesquely vituperative language made her the terror of whomsoever she denounced and the delight of the audience that always rapidly assembled. She never met a man without a charge. There have been many versions of that meeting, for the victor was no less a person than Daniel O'Connell, whose friends laid a wager that he could reduce her to silence, but they all appear to be based on the same narrative published in the "Standard" of the last century by Daniel Owen Madden.

The encounter opened briskly, with a taste of the virago's tongue, promptly administered upon O'Connell venturing to object to the price she asked for a walking stick.

"You can't deny the charge," he affirmed with apparent indignation. "You can't—your miserable submultiple of a duplicate ratio! While I have a tongue I'll abuse you, you most immitable periphery! Look at her, boys; there she stands, a convicted perpendiclar in petticoats! She trembles with guilt down to the extremities of her corollaries. Ah, you're found out, you rectilinear antecedent and equiangular old hag—you porter swiping similitude of the bisection of a vortex!"

It was too much. Abandoning words, the aged virago snatched up a saucapan to hurl at the head of the perpetrator of such an overwhelming onslaught of geometrical verbosity. A bystander deflected its course, and O'Connell prudently retreated, but he had won the wager. With Euclid for his ally, he had vanquished the virago.

Kindly Lord Roberts. A certain colonel, on returning victorious from one of those difficult frontier expeditions which attract small notice at home, came into the chief's office to report the result of his operations, writes Maud Diver in "The Cornhill Magazine."

"Bobs," who was very busy at the moment, merely remarked: "I'm writing my despatches. They are nearly done." But before they were done he looked up again. "Well—how did the affair go off?"

The colonel, in plain, soldierly language, told his tale, and the general nodded, well pleased. "Good—very good. Very well done," he said, and added, with his kindest smile, "Now, I'm sending a telegram to my wife. Wouldn't you like to send just one word to yours? She will be anxious."

The colonel's gratitude may be imagined, and the thing was done. There were more despatches to write, but "Bobs," who could think of a wife's anxiety, could also think of the husband's immediate need.

"You've had a hard day of it," he said, "and you must be pretty hungry. My dinner's ready waiting. Do sit down at once and help yourself. Just a trifling act of courtesy; but every general would have thought of it at a busy moment; and quite possibly "Bobs" added another to his long list of devoted worshippers that evening.

Should Be Given On Spot. In presenting the Victoria Cross to soldiers actually "in the field," King George may, to some extent, have been influenced by the original order, which provides that under conditions stipulated the coveted decoration shall be conferred "on the spot where the act to be rewarded by the grant of such decoration has been performed."

Very Amusing. The late Dr. A. K. H. Boyd of Scotland once visited a woman who had lost her husband. By way of comforting her he proceeded to set forth with great earnestness and beauty of language the joys of the state to which the departed one had attained. The bereaved woman, with a vivid recollection of her husband's defects, found it hard to share in the minister's hopes, although she wished to show her sense of his kindness. She unburdened herself thus: "Well, Dr. Boyd, you're maybe no ven' in-structive, but you're aye amusing."

TO GET AFTER ABSCONDEERS.

Ontario's Attorney-General Preparing To Bring Back Malefactors.

It is a notorious fact that very many of the big swindlers, for whom Ontario has proved a happy hunting-ground in the past few years, have been successful in "making their getaway," as soon as they found the game was up. For instance, the manager of the Sovereign Bank left on his way, undisturbed by the law's myrmidons, seems to have become almost second nature with the Ontario malefactor. Pollman Evans, wanted to stand his trial in connection with the Union Life scandal, is believed to be basking in France, where, even if he is nearer the battlefield, he certainly has the advantage in climate (and other things) over Symons.

"There can be no question," said a lawyer of wide criminal experience the other day, "that fugitives from justice have, in the past, in the Province of Ontario, been treated with too great leniency. It rests with the Attorney-General's Department to decide if any steps are to be taken to bring back a fugitive from justice, and there are signs that the new Attorney-General means to use every means to bring Pollman Evans back. But if it is true that he is in France, I may mention that, in normal circumstances, extradition from France is a matter of considerable difficulty, which is, of course, immensely enhanced now by the war. But, speaking generally, if a Government is in earnest, it is usually possible, with society organized as it is to-day, to trace and bring back a fugitive criminal."

"On every ground the question of expense should not be taken into consideration, though I believe that officialdom has inclined to the view that if (in a case of fraud, for example) the person defrauded has been wronged largely by reason of his own neglect to observe proper precautions, and has put the law in motion to get his revenge, he shall not be helped to do so out of public funds. Fugitives from justice can be traced more easily than the public imagines. Their descriptions and pictures are circulated throughout any country whither they are likely to have fled, if it is seriously intended to bring them back.

"By international practice criminals are surrendered by a country only in consequence of some special treaty with the country which demands them. But extradition treaties exist between Canada, as part of the British Empire, and practically all civilized foreign countries. The offences which are known as extradition offences comprise all the more serious crimes. Thus fugitives from Canada will be given up by the country to which they have fled, if accused or convicted of (among other crimes) murder, attempt or conspiracy to murder, manslaughter, forgery, embezzlement, larceny, false pretences, rape, arson, robbery with violence, and threats with intent to extort money."

The Value of Wood Waste. The value of most of the wood waste produced today in Canada is limited to its fuel value for the production of power at the mill. In some cases, methods of closer utilization have been worked out, but, compared with the total amount of wood waste produced, the amount utilized is almost negligible.

Furthermore, most of the large lumber mills produce waste greatly in excess of the amount necessary for power production and the waste burners are still in use, involving not only a loss of large amounts of wood, but also a definite, fixed charge to get rid of it. It has been suggested that a small percentage of this material, but the problem is being attacked from a number of different angles and there is reason to believe that, within a short time, a much larger percentage of such material can be utilized at a profit. Lumber mills are beginning to look toward the commercial production of ethyl alcohol from the distillation of sawdust, shavings, edgings, etc.

A study of the motor fuel problem will show that the production of mineral fuels, such as gasoline, motor spirit, etc., is being paced with automobile production. Alcohol appears to be the only solution of the problem, for, if it can be produced from wood waste at a reasonable figure, a tremendous supply of raw material is available from a natural, growing raw material which is not a foodstuff.

Dark Period Passes. Vancouver reports say that while that city commercially has passed through a dark period, a wave of optimism is being felt. There is some reason for this as indications of renewed activity are present. The shipping trade is reviving, the number of boats is to get under way more approaching a normal basis shortly, and mining, which had a good year in 1914, is being resumed. A good deal of construction work is booked for this year. The output of salmon last year on the coast is estimated at $300,000 cases. The Okanagan Valley fruit crop was large last year, plums, crab apples and prunes being about double the year before taken together. Grocers in the city are only moderately active now, but most of them report a fairly satisfactory profit and loss account for 1914.

An Expensive Wood. One of the most expensive woods used regularly in an established industry in Canada is boxwood, the favorite material for wood engraving. It has been quoted at four cents a cubic inch, and about $1,500 by the thousand and board feet.

There's a whole lot of safety in not putting yourself in the way of temptation. The too sweet, amiable man in public is generally a surly bear in his family.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A clever way of employing two materials in the development of a dress for a girl between the ages of six and fourteen years.

This dainty little frock is very practical for school girls, and the latest ideas in the combination of contrasting materials. Checked and plain linen are used in its development, the pleated skirt and bolero jacket being of the former and underbust of the latter. Checked linen cuffs, however, finish the elbow sleeves of the underbust. Blue and white striped linen combined with white is a dainty combination, yet much brown and green are seen. The average size requires 2 yards of 36-inch material for bolero and skirt and 1 1/2 yard 26 inches wide for the underbust.

Beginning with the waist, the order of construction is as follows: waist, sleeve, skirt and bolero. Match the notches, then stitch the under-arm and shoulder seams. Hem the front turning in at notches and watching the large "O" perforations for the center. Gather lower edge of front between double "T" perforations, and entire lower edge of back. Sew round collar to edge, center-back even and along small "o" perforations in front, three "O" perforations even. Close sleeve and cuff seams as notched. Sew upper cuff to short sleeve, double "oo" perforations and seams even. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, easing any fullness.

Close back seam of skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge, finish edges above for opening. Turn hem at lower edge on double "oo" perforations. Form box-pleats, creasing on slot perforations, bring folded edges to corresponding small "oo" perforations and bring fold near center-back to center: press pleats. Sew to lower edge of waist, centers even, large "O" perforation at under-arm seam.

Close under-arm seam of bolero as notched, close shoulder seam. Adjust position on waist, centers even. A tiny edge of braid may be added to the decoration of the bolero, put on in outline effect.

Look for the Trade Mark.

The manufacturer that advertises an article does so in the belief that you will become a permanent customer.

It would not pay to advertise if you were to buy only one package of washing or baking powder, soap, lye, tea, coffee or cocoa. And to assure your future patronage, he must give you full value for your money. In other words, when an article, particularly one selling for a small price, is advertised, it is absolute evidence that it must be good value.

Examine the name and the Trade Mark. Get the genuine article as advertised. You are not safe with a substitute.

Not Long With French.

During the South African war the Boers were, according to Mr. Cecil Chisholm, M.A., in his authentic biography of Sir John French, the first to admit French's superiority to the other English officer if not to themselves. De Wet was once asked in the early stages of the war how long he expected to avoid capture. He replied, with a smile, that it all depended on which general was despatched to run him down. When a certain name was mentioned, the reply was, "Till Eternity." Gen. B. was next mentioned. "About two years," was the verdict. "And Gen. French?" "Two weeks," admitted De Wet.

Khaki For Tartans.

The Scotch kilted regiments are threatened with the substitution of khaki for their tartans. It will be some time, however, before the change can be brought about, for it will be some months before all the units of the new army can be supplied with their khaki uniforms.
