IN MILITARY CIRCLES HAD PLANNED A SPLIT

SOLDIERS WILL BE CHARGED $15 FOR DISCHARGE IN THE ENTENTE OVER THE DARDANELLES.

An Order Issued With Regard to the Matter—Officers Walking Sticks Banned at the C. O.'s Parades.

Members of the Expeditionary Forces who apply for their discharge or whose parents or wives request that they be released, will hereafter be required to pay the sum of $15 before the discharge will be granted if the application is made within the first three months of their service. A notice to this effect was contained in the camp orders yesterday, the item being an extract from a report of the committee of the Privy Council approved by H.B.H. the Governor-General on the 3rd of March, and taking effect immediately.

A further restriction against too great ease in securing a discharge is also announced to apply to all men who enlist after the first of March. This states that for all such the sum of $10 will be withheld from the pay of every man enlisting, this sum to be held for six months and is for the purpose of defraying the cost of civilian clothing for men who are discharged within six months of enlistment. The money would be applied to partially defraying the cost of the military issues to such men. At the termination of the six months the amount may be repaid and thereafter civilian clothes will be supplied free on discharge. An exception to the rule is to be made in special cases where a man is discharged as the result of serious injury received in the discharge of duty.

WILL ITALY FIGHT?

Rome, March 10.—An extremely important meeting of the Council of Ministers was held last evening. The ministers considered matters of the gravest importance for the future of Italy. No information as to their decisions has yet become public, but it is believed that a declaration of war is imminent and may come within the next forty-eight hours.

Germany Sought To Sow Discord Among Allies, But the Latter Were Apparently Aware Of the Plot.

Petrograd, March 10.—I hear that when the Allied squadron threatened to force the Dardanelles a supreme council of war was summoned at Constantinople. It was attended by the members of the Ottoman government, and the German masters of Constantinople were present. From the decision arrived at it is very evident that the Germans dictated it.

It was decided that if the Dardanelles defences were overcome terms should be offered at once to England—that Turkey should throw herself on the tender mercies of England and endeavor to save the imperial city at the price of tamely surrendering the guardianship of the Dardanelles in perpetuity to England.

The obvious intention of such a proposal was to sow discord among the Allies. Whether these terms were ever brought to the notice of the British admiral or the government in England, I do not know; but probably something was known on the spot, for action of a striking character was immediately taken.

The Russian cruiser Askold joined her flag to the British and French. This alone was quite sufficient, but care was taken still further to emphasize the perfect solidarity between the Allies. Naval international custom in the case of Allied squadrons operating together is very strict, and before operations are begun great care is taken by the respective governments regarding the seniority of commanders, for upon this question the supreme control of the combined forces by a polite faction is made to rest. Naturally, it is nearly always arranged that the flag which covers the largest force shall have the supreme command and this flag everywhere takes the lead.

On the present occasion a striking and significant departure was made from immemorial practice. The Askold was gratefully invited to take the Russian flag into the Dardanelles ahead of the Allies. Nothing more need be said, for deeds speak more loudly than words.

Germany's last hope was a possible dissention between the Allies precisely on this age-old trouble, for the possession of the Dardanelles. More than any other, this question has kept the Ottoman Empire alive for generations. It is now settled for all practical purposes.

LORD KITCHENER MOVES

Now Has His Quarters in York House.

London, March 10.—Lord Kitchener took up his quarters yesterday in a suite of rooms in St. James Palace, known as York House, which was given to him by the king for his use during the war.

London gossips used to tell a story that when Lord Kitchener took charge at the War Office his first question was:

"Is there a bed there?" and his first order was "Get one." The Manchester Guardian says the story is, of course, nonsense, that Kitchener has no bed in the war office, has never slept there, and only on rare occasion is he there at night. He has been living for some months in Carlton Gardens, five minutes' walk from the war office. York House is a rather sombre building on the north side of Ambassador's Court, but the big rooms will mean a stately setting for entertaining. One odd thing about the house is that there is not an inch of garden or private grounds attached to it.

On one side is a street, and on the side a public way through a court, that a few days ago York House was the headquarters of the Prince of Wales Fund, and one of a score of lordly houses which have become centres of war activity.

Nova Scotia's War Tax

Halifax, N.S., March 10.—The first direct provincial taxation in the history of Nova Scotia since Confederation is now proposed by Premier Murray, who introduced a bill in the House of Assembly yesterday called the Provincial War Tax Act. Under its provisions it is proposed to levy a tax of one mill in the dollar on all assessable property in the municipalities, towns and cities of Nova Scotia. The tax, it is estimated, will produce $117,000 additional revenue. The provisional deficit at the end of the fiscal year was $112,000.

Premier Murray intimated that this would not be the only new taxation bill to be presented at this session of the legislature.

GERMAN CRUISER LIMPS INTO NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

(Special to the Whig.) Newport News, Va., March 10.—Full of fight, but with her coal bunkers empty, her stores depleted and huge gaping wounds in her upper works, the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Frederick arrived here this morning, and although her officers and men will not admit it, it is likely she will be interned here for the rest of the war.

Her captain has come ashore for instructions from the German ambassador, but those who have seen the vessel say it will be impossible to put to sea again without extensive repairs.

It is stated that there are three hundred British, Russian and French prisoners aboard, taken from merchant ships sunk.
