For Quiet Moments.

Herbert Kaufman: Half of greatness is grit.

Everybody who ever did anything anywhere had to find the grindstone and run himself against it until he developed an edge that would cut something.

Henry Sloane Coffin: Before you can get religion into anyone else you have got to have a contagious case of it yourself.

Edward Sanford Martin: After all, disturbance is a fine thing.

First and last, pretty much all the considerable good we see about has come along of it.

The ocean, without occasional gales, would be dull, and human life, without occasional disturbances, would get nowhere.

SWEET MARY.

These lines, written by an Irish divine, the Rev. J. Wolfe, who died about half a century ago, are worthy of the pen of Goldsmith:

If I had thought thou couldst have died,
I might not weep for thee;
But I forgot, when by thy side,
Thou couldst mortal be;
It never thought my mind had passed,
The time would e'er be o'er,
That I of thee should look my last,
And thou shouldst smile no more!

And still upon thy face I look,
And think 'twould smile again;
And still the thought I will not brook,
That I must look in vain!
But when I speak, thou dost not say
What thou ne'er left'st unsaid,
And now I feel as well I may,
Sweet Mary! thou art dead!

If thou wouldst stay even as thou art,
All cold, and all serene,
I still might press thy silent heart,
And where thy smiles have been!
While e'en thy chill bleak core, I have,
Thou seemest still mine own,
But there I lay thee in thy grave—
And I am now alone.

I do not think, where'er thou art,
Thou hast forgotten me;
And I, perhaps, may soothe thy heart
In thinking, too, of thee;
Yet there was round thee such a dawn,
Of light ne'er seen before,
As fancy never could have drawn,
And never can restore!

Hints For Children's Birthday Parties

There is no other day in all the year—not even Christmas, with its wealth of childhood joys and groupings have such a good opportunity to make the child happy as on his birthday. And it is no exaggeration to say that the child who is not convinced that his own birthday is the pleasantest most gladsome day in all the year, is a defective member, or been given a proper birthday. Remember, in planning the next birthday party or surprise that this one day, in all the 365, is the child's very own—a day to be spent as the child—not as we grownups think a birthday should be spent.

So if the child wants a party give him a party; if he likes picnics more than parties give him a picnic; if playing in the sand and waves is his idea of happiness, let the birthday surprise be a trip to the sea or lake shore.

While you are planning what sort of birthday will make the child the most pleased, do not forget that the great source of birthday joy comes in the element of complete surprise, and the greatest secrecy should be maintained with regard to the preparations for the birthday doings, so that nothing is detected by the child, even the joy of anticipation—from the real birthday happiness.

In planning the birthday surprises do not make the mistake of giving the child too much at once, but rather spread the surprises out from the little too hidden in the child's shoe in the morning to a last token tucked under his pillow at night. There are many clever schemes of spreading the joy of surprises out over the whole day, and perhaps the most favorite one with children is that of the surprise bag.

A large crocheted bag is best used for this surprise bag, one as large as a laundry bag, with drawstrings in the top. Twelve or fourteen presents, one for each hour of the day, should be carefully wrapped up and placed in the bag, and the child whose birthday it is allowed to draw one present at each stroke of the clock all day. The presents selected for this bag need not be more than trifles, worth only a few cents a piece, although it adds to the interest if one or two more valuable presents are mixed with the trifles in the bag. A box of colored pencils, a new pencil sharpener, a little game, a bag of marbles for a boy, a bag of jackstones for a girl are suitable inexpensive presents for the birthday surprise bag.

Another method of adding to the excitement of birthday presents is in hiding them and making the child search for them unaided. At breakfast, or at whatever meal the family can take time for a little birthday fun, the child might find a card slipped under his plate. Attached to the card is the end of several dozen feet of twine, and the child is told to follow the cord if he wants to find his birthday presents. Of course, beforehand, the cord has been cleverly carried around the room with the various birthday presents attached to it. Perhaps the cord first leads the child straight under the table, around the legs of the table, back to the child's own chair, through one of the rungs, down under the table again, where a little package, tied to the string, is found hidden. Of course, the child has to stop to untie this bundle, which, by the way, is carefully wrapped in paper and a box, and there finds his present from grandmother. The string now leads the child from the table to the corner of the room, and in a roundabout way, to the sideboard and there, in the sideboard drawer, is discovered the present from father. So on around the room the various presents are hidden. Occasionally tied to the string there are little inexpensive favors, neatly tied up and marked to grandmother, or to father, which the child is supposed to present to the various members of the family.

For Freckled, Rough or Spotty Complexions

The freckling, discoloring or roughness to which delicate skins are subjected by the action of wind or sun, often appearing in early spring, may readily be gotten rid of. Mercolized wax, spread lightly over the face before retiring and removed in the morning with soap and water, completely gets rid of the discoloration. Get an ounce of the wax at any druggist's. There's no more effective way of banishing freckles, other cutaneous defects. Little skin particles come off each day, so the process doesn't even temporarily mar the complexion, and one soon acquires a brand new, spotless, girlishly beautiful face.

Wrinkles caused by weather, worry or illness are best treated by a simple solution of powdered rosolite, 1 oz. dissolved in 1/2 pint of water. Rubbing the face in this produces a truly marvelous transformation.

FRECKLES

February and March Bring Out Un-sightly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

The woman with tender skin dreads February and March because they are likely to cover her face with ugly freckles. No matter how thick her veil, the sun and winds have a strong tendency to make her freckle.

Fortunately for her peace of mind the recent discovery of a new prescription, othine—double strength, makes it possible for even those most susceptible to freckles to keep their skin clear and white. No matter how stubborn a case of freckles you have, the double strength othine should remove them.

Get an ounce from Geo. W. Macdonald or any druggist and banish the freckles. Money back if it fails.
