TYRANNY IN MOROCCO.

Sultan Enjoys Absolute Power and Makes Things Interesting.

Morocco is ruled by a Sultan who enjoys absolute power. The lives and property of his subjects are entirely at his mercy and command. He utters a word, and a man is promoted from a lowly place to one of great power and riches. He utters another word and a man is stripped of all his splendor and put to death at once, or cast into prison to starve and die.

The great ministers, the viziers, or wazeers, hold office purely at the will of the Sultan. So do the great officials of the court, chief among whom is the bearer of the parasol, or umbrella, the royal insignia. When a Moorish Sultan rides forth in state sacred person; the headsman, armed with a broad steel blade; the flogger, with his instrument; the spear-bearer, though Moors carry guns, not spears, nowadays; the cushionbearer, the tent-layer and the teamaker.

The land is divided into provinces and districts ruled by governors, under the title of basha and kaid, the basha being the greater man of the two. These men are often local tyrants, and they often enjoy the power of bleeding their subjects. Sometimes one goes too far, and the One Industry In Which Machinery Is herce tribesmen of the district rise against him, the countryside flaming into open rebellion. If the rebellion be too widespread to be put down by the local governor be, in the Moorish phrase, "eaten The expression is literally true. The province will be swept from end to end and left desolate. Every house destroyed, every man slain or taken prisoner, every woman and child carried off into slavery, or trodden underfoot, the troops pass on, leaving an absolute desert behind them. In this manner rich and flourishing districts have been emptied of every living creature, and left mere desolate wastes.

As the basha treats the people, so treasury, and if his offering is conand he is thrown into prison. Offiday cers from court arrive to take away his treasure. His wives, the people are sold in the open market to the highest bidder, and from a pinnacle of great power he pitches headlong into the pit of utter ruin This change gives the greatest de ight to the people whom he has oppressed. One day, perhaps, a basha rides through the streets in all his splendor, his troops guarding him, and all who meet him bowing low before him, and deeming it a great honor to be allowed to kiss the hem of his rich silken robe. The next day he may be dragged through the same streets by a common soldier, a rope about his neck, his rich

The locality is the Tuamotu or Low Archipelago, composed of 87 coral atolls, about 100 miles eastward of Tabiti; the industry is the pearl fisheries of the archipelago. the finest pearls in the South Pacific being found in the waters adjacent to these islands, as well as considerable quantities of the so-called blackedge mother-of-pearl shell much used

There are about 3,500 divers and these are practically all native Polynesians. None, but French citizens may engage in this business of French chine or other scientific apparatus of any kind whatever is absolutely forbidden, the equipment of the diver being strictly confined to a pair of large goggles, a loin cloth, a rope and a weight. The goggles are for protection from the salt water, enabling the diver to see clearly.

In the early morning, launches tow long strings of outrigger canoes, sometimes 20 to 25, out to the diving grounds. Entire families travel to the scene of operations, taking their day's provisions as well as their dogs and other pets along.

The divers use manila rope, one end of which is fastened securely to the anchored canoe, while the other is attached a weight of from 22 to 26 pounds. When ready to descend he takes two or three long breaths to expand his lungs, fills his lungs with air, takes hold of the weighted rope, jumps in and he is carried to the bottom. There he lets go of the rope and collects the shell, which is placed in a woven basket made from fish net. This basket holds from 66 to 77 pounds of shell and takes several dives to fill, as the diver can remain under water only one to three minutes at a time. When the basket is filled it is drawn into the canoe and the shells are opened.

Native divers descend to considerable depths, more than 130 feet being frequently attained, but shell is not infrequently picked from the rocks in water not more than four to six feet in depth, although the amount thus obtained is comparatively small.

The law requires that all shell be opened before landing and the contents, excepting the mussel itself, which the finder is privileged to eat, be thrown back into the sea to replenish the beds. The outside of the shell must, likewise, be scraped and all foreign growths removed and thrown into the water. Failure to comply with these requirements renders the offender liable to a severe
