THE FIRE PROBLEM

Study of Conditions Shows Railway Caused Over Half.

A study of the fire problem along the Canadian Pacific Railway in Ontario was made during the summer of 1914 by the company's fire inspector. It was found that there were 233 fires in the timber district of Ontario, or within 100 miles of the company's lines. Of these, 105 fires occurred on or immediately adjoining the right of way, while the balance had their origin on settlers' lands, on timber holdings, or had been caused by logging or rivers from driving operations.

It was found that many fires occur in close proximity to railway lines, for the origin of which the company is in no way responsible. So, the severity of fires is greatly increased by the large amounts of inflammable debris frequently found on adjoining lands, especially cut-over timber limits, where as a rule no attention is paid to the disposal of logging slash. No possible amount of right-of-way clearing can remedy this condition.

Settlers' clearing operations are one of the greatest sources of fire danger, on account of prevailing carelessness in the use of fire. It is argued that a permit system is needed in Ontario for controlling the setting of fire during the summer season, as is now being done successfully in both Quebec and British Columbia.

On account of its accessibility young forest growth along railway lines has a greater prospective value than that remote from transportation; thus justifying adequate protection from fire by the Crown. One material source of fire danger along railway lines is the use of the tracks as a highway by pedestrians of all kinds, including tramps, unemployed laborers, settlers, etc. It has so far been found impossible to stop this, and many fires have been started by such agencies which can ordinarily be attributed to the railway.

In many forest sections, as for instance in northern Ontario, the danger of fire is very great, and local organizations are needed in order to cope with this hazard. Such organizations have been formed in various forms in some of the states of the Union. Only some of the broader aspects of the fire situation have been touched as yet. Much still remains to be done before really adequate protection can be afforded by the railway.

BUSINESS TALKS

When the General Roofing Manufacturing Company, makers of Certain-teed Roofing, decided to experiment with newspaper advertising early in 1914 they picked out a few of the larger cities and employed a handful of newspapers.

George M. Brown, president of the company, soon found that his many difficult problems of merchandizing yielded to newspaper advertising, not only because of quick direct demand created among the users of roofing, but because the dealers themselves, all newspaper readers, could be reached better through his campaign in the dailies than in any other way.

That is why the Certain-teed campaign finally took in a list of 800 newspapers, and we have Mr. Brown's statement of the fact that his business for January and February, 1915, showed a minimum gain of 19 per cent, and a maximum gain of 70 per cent, over the same period in 1914—and this in the face of adverse conditions created by the great war.
