PLAYBOY OF CANADIANS BALLY

Private Marchington of the Third Battalion Sends Home a Vivid Story of How Fifty Men Were Sent to Reinforce Front Trenches

What Colonel Rennie told officially in his recent graphic report of the operations of the Canadians at Langemark is put in the realistic words of the soldier himself in a letter received from Pte. Arthur Marchington...

"We marched to a place 1,000 yards behind our front line trenches... The shells were now falling about us, and killed and wounded quite a few.

"We ran forward in skirmishing order in dashes of 25 yards. It was broad daylight, and as soon as the Germans saw us they opened a murderous volley from rifles and machine guns.

"It resembled very much being around a hive of bees—size, zip, and the bullets whistled past.

"We rested half an hour and then the order came to drive the devils out of a farmhouse some 100 yards in front of our trenches.

"I crawled on for all the world like a snake, making headway bit by bit. All of a sudden I felt as if someone had rubbed a red-hot poker across my shoulder.

"I crawled along beside my mate—Jeff. I used to call him by his name because he was so short.

BUCKNAM PASHA DEAD.

Canadian Who Became a Turkish Admiral Has Passed Away.

Bucknam Pasha, the Canadian boy, who was formerly rear-admiral in the Turkish navy, died on May 27 after several weeks of illness.

Bucknam Pasha had an interesting early career, but he did not begin to figure on the international horizon until 1904.

Bucknam trained Captain Raouf Bey, the greatest Turkish naval commander of modern times.

Bucknam was nearly beaten to death at Kiel, Germany, when he made a trip there in order to find out why the Sultan's officers required so much time and money to have a cruiser repaired.
